Bowl-Bound Terps Beat Boston 14-13 As Fans Riot

Last Quarter Drive Of 81 Yards Led By Lavine Brings Maryland Victory

By Shirley Povich
Post Reporter

Boston, Nov. 12.—Substitute Quarterback Stan Lavine rallied the apparently beaten forces of Maryland University in the fourth quarter today and spurred them on an unstoppable 81-yard touchdown drive that nudged Boston University from the ranks of the undefeated, 14-13.

To the consternation of the Boston fans among the 30,263 in Fenway Park, the 160-pound Lavine took complete charge of the contest in the final period and deflated the bowl hopes of Boston University. Gambling boldly on his own signal-calling, Lavine kept the Maryland attack on the move until he personally crowded the ball over from the 1-yard line for the touchdown that tied the score at 13-13. Tackle Bob Dean calmly place-kicked the winning fourteenth point, to make disaster of the conversion previously missed in the first quarter by Andy Dell 'Olio, of B. U. in the second quarter.

There was a lot of football played in the United States, but here in Fenway Park the spectators saw what might have been

Students, Police Mix In Goalpost Battle

Boston, Nov. 12. — The ferocity of the Maryland-Boston University football clash here today, in which Maryland won 14 to 13, was carried over into postgame activities of students of both schools who staged a drawn-out battle for the goalposts.

Terrapin students among the 2000 Maryland fans who migrated here for the contest carried away the goalposts on the south side of the gridiron two minutes before the game's end, when they attacked the opposite posts at the final gun, it was a riot.

The red-clad Boston University Band first attempted to defend the posts from the Maryland student charge, and instruments were swung in the melee as well as fists. A dozen policemen joined the battle, and were welcomed as combatants by the victory-happy Marylanders, who stampeded the bluecoats and renewed their attack on the souvenir lumber.

For nearly 15 minutes the epilogue raged before the happy Maryland undergraduates hauled down the posts and bore them away in triumph, with an unfortunate few in the hands of the cops.

Higher Education Pays Off Again In Wisconsin

Madison, Wis., Nov. 12 (AP)—About 500 men students let sheep, white mice, guinea pigs, cats and dogs loose in a women's dormitory of the University of Wisconsin last night.

While coeds and alumnae stood on chairs and squealed, the men paraded about the dormitory and threw bedclothes around.

Campus Policeman Joe Hammersley pulled up in his squad car, rushed in, and with the help of other officers herded the menagerie out of Elizabeth Waters Hall.

When Hammersley got back to his car he found it with the tires flat and a well-greased pig reclining on the seat.

It was, police said, a "normal" homecoming eve.

O'Connor Urges 'No Cuts'

500 Red Cross Workers Bid Farewell to Chief of 5 Years

By Gene Jones—The Washington Post
General Marshall and Basil O'Connor

Basil O'Connor, who headed the National Red Cross for five years, said goodby to 500 of his coworkers at a testimonial dinner in the Statler Hotel last night, and urged them not to cut the organization's program for reasons of economy.

Two days before the national society's board of governors meets here to set policy for 1950, O'Connor warned:

"Before we cut a program that is a proper program on the basis that we can't raise the money, we must recall that in the past five years the American people have raised more than we asked."

Red Cross officials saw this as a direct appeal to the present, economy-minded board.

O'Connor, former law partner of the late President Roosevelt, assumed the leadership of the Red Cross in July, 1944. He resigned October 1 to devote more time to his law practice, his family and another philanthropy he and President Roosevelt shared an interest

Catholic Jurist Held Uncurbed In U. S. Courts

CU Professor Says Pope Doesn't Bar Granting Divorces

Principles pronounced by Pope Pius would not in any way "compromise" an American Catholic judge in administering justice, a Catholic University professor of moral theology declared yesterday.

The Very Rev. Francis J. Connell, CSSR, issued a statement answering criticism of the Holy Father's speech to a group of Italian Catholic jurists in Rome November 7.

On handling divorces—center of the controversy—Dr. Connell said the American judge of Catholic faith "should avoid taking divorce cases" if he can.

If a Catholic judge must sit in on a divorce proceeding, said Dr. Connell, "it is not intrinsically wrong for him to declare that, so far as the civil law is concerned, they are no longer to be regarded as husband and wife."

The Pope had told Italian jurists to be cautious about granting divorces that would break up marriages "valid before God and the church."

The Catholic University professor stressed that the Pope's pronouncement did not advance new principles, but "was merely restating and applying tenets which have been presented for many years in manuals of Catholic moral thinking."

Directly after the Pope's speech, Glenn L. Archer, executive director of Protestants and Other Americans United for Separation of Church and State, said Catholic judges should resign promptly if they cannot mete out justice according to the law.

Dr. Connell said he was making his clarifying statement of the Pope's speech because of such criticism.

"It is difficult to see," Dr. Connell said, "how any fair-minded person can regard the statement of the Pope as imposing on Catholic judges restrictions that will prevent them from giving the full measure of service and loyalty to the laws of our country.

"It will rather serve to remind

Soviet Firm On Its Idea Of A-Control

Vishinsky Rejects Previous Interest In Quota Plan

By Peter Kihss

Lake Success, Nov. 12 (NYHT).—Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Y. Vishinsky declared today that Soviet requirements of atomic energy for explosives projects were "tremendous and they are growing," and refused to accept any quota limits on atomic fuels.

In his second speech before the U. N. General Assembly's Special Political Committee, Vishinsky not only stood pat on the 1947 Russian atom control plan, but rejected a previous Soviet interest in the majority's idea of quota controls.

1. Declared the Soviet Union willing to open its doors to U. N. atomic inspectors on a periodic basis "on a timetable set up by the international control organ"

Assistant Secretary of State John D. Hickerson told reporters the U. N. majority wanted all-out inspection every day not only of "facilities declared by the Soviet government" but to ferret out any facilities that might be hidden.

2. Caused journalistic commotion by asserting some atomic bombs had "killed scores of thousands of persons without any need, militarily speaking, from the point of view of prosecuting the war or from the point of view of anybody's war aims." Questioned later as to whether he meant the Hiroshima and Nagasaki bombs were unnecessary to defeat Japan, Vishinsky said he had only meant to say what Generalissimo Stalin said September 24, 1946: "Atomic bombs are intended for intimidating weak nerves, but they cannot decide the outcome of war, since atomic bombs are by no means sufficient for this purpose."

3. Charged the United States and majority nations said they meant to postpone prohibition of American atomic bombs until "the Greek calends" (first experience)—and the Greeks "never did have calends, so to say the Greek calends means never." The majority timetable has never been

Sour Note in Roanoke

Jimmy Dorsey Held for Hitting Milkman's Head With Clarinet

Roanoke, Va., Nov. 12 (U.P.).—Police arrested Jimmy Dorsey today on charges of swinging his clarinet on the head of a milkman who, the band leader said, wouldn't keep quiet.

The milkman said all he did was ask Dorsey if he was the brother of band leader Tommy Dorsey, whom he has known for years. (He is.) Dorsey said he acted in self-defense after the milkman became "abusive and obnoxious" to him and his orchestra.

The complainant was William G. Toney, 22, who delivers milk in Richmond. He alleged that the band leader, who doubles on the alto sax and clarinet, socked him with the smaller instrument at a dance in Richmond Wednesday night.

[The Associated Press quoted Dorsey as saying that the man had been heckling him for 15 or 20 minutes before he "finally got tired of it." He said the milkman made "degrading remarks" about the band, its music and its members. "After all," Dorsey said, "how much can a guy take?"

[The Associated Press account said Toney accused Dorsey of calling him a name, plainly heard over the public address system, and then bashing him on the left temple with the clarinet. The clarinet was apparently unharmed.—Editor's Note.]

Toney said he left the dance in a dazed condition and his wife revived him with an ice pack.

Toney set out on his route Thursday with a 2-inch bump on his head, he said. When he came home he swore out a misdemeanor assault warrant against the clarinetist.

Richmond police sent out a pickup notice and Roanoke officers executed it this morning. Dorsey was released under $100 bond pending appearance in Richmond Police Court Monday.

Dorsey refused to comment except for the statement through his manager that Toney had been obnoxious.

Panyushkin Walks Out of U. N. Session

Soviet Envoy Cries 'Slander' to Yugoslav Charges of Soviet Troop Movements

Lake Success, Nov. 12 (NYHT).—His head high and his anger visible, Alexander Panyushkin, Russian Ambassador to the United States, walked out of a meeting of the social committee of the United Nations General Assembly here today after refusing to answer Yugoslav charges of Soviet troop movements on her frontiers.

"I consider it beneath my dignity to answer the slanders of the representative of the Tito clique," Panyushkin said tersely and left his seat at the conference table.

V. M. Zonov, Soviet delegation adviser, who had been sitting behind the Ambassador, listened attentively to the debate for a while and then quietly moved up and filled the empty Russian chair at the conference table.

Vladimir Dedijer, Yugoslav delegate to the committee, said Panyushkin's reply was "the answer of an ostrich." Nodding at the empty chair, he said "the Soviet delegate has no answers and therefor he refuses to reply."

Dedijer yesterday and again today said Russia was concentrating troops on Yugoslavia's borders, that Russia has refused to take home its citizens resident in Yugoslavia despite requests that it do so.

Yugoslavia maintains that Russia has organized 3000 Russian citizens in the Yugoslav civil service and 3000 others who are refugees in Yugoslavia into a terroristic network that threatens the security of Tito's nation.

Although several delegations indicated that they thought the constant exchanges of charges and counter-charges between Yugoslavia and Russia were unnecessary and interfering with the committee's work, the rivals justified it on the ground that the group was discussing refugees and stateless persons and that Yugoslavia had maintained that the Russians were exploiting refugees for political ends.

Czechoslovakia answered the Yugoslav charges by saying: "The accusations of aggressive intentions against the Soviet Union are like a thief who shouts 'Stop, thief' to confuse the pursuit." The speaker said the treason trial of Lazslo Rajk in Budapest has proved the expansionist tendencies of the Tito regime, to which Yugoslavia replied that on the contrary it proved "the Soviet Union was desperate in her efforts to overthrow Marshal Tito."

The committee adjourned until Monday after asking the United States, which is represented by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, and France to attempt over the weekend to combine their resolutions into a single draft. It would deal with the establishment of a U. N. office of high commissioner for refugees to care for refugees and stateless persons after the International Refugee Organization finishes its work and goes out of existence.

Disaster P-38 Once Racer, Forced Down

Airport's Director Disputes Towerman On Runway Used In Plane's Take-Off

By Richard Morris
Post Reporter

The P-38 in the air disaster of November 1 was flown in the 1946 Bendix Trophy race from Los Angeles to Cleveland, but landed en route in Kansas City with engine trouble, it was learned last night.

The disclosure followed a strong suggestion yesterday during a Civil Aeronautics Board inquiry into the crash, which killed 55 persons, that the speedy fighter plane may have been modified as a racer without the knowledge of its Bolivian pilot, Erick Rice Bridoux.

Denies "Souping Up"

H. L. Pemberton, a Kalamazoo (Mich.) racing pilot from whom a surplus property seller here bought the P-38, told The Washington Post by telephone he entered the plane in the cross-country race. But it had not then been "souped up" or otherwise modified as a racer, he said.

Hasson Calloway, an Eastern Air Lines pilot, was flying the plane to Cleveland when an engine failure forced him to land in Kansas City, Pemberton said.

"He didn't push it at all because of bad weather conditions," Pemberton said. "And he was satisfied that faulty operation of the controls caused the engine to go out."

The faulty engine functioned normally only with a rich fuel mixture, which used up so much gasoline Calloway had to land and refuel in Kansas City, Pemberton said.

No Repairs Made

There were no repairs made, and the pilot continued on to Cleveland 12 or 15 minutes later on a "routine flight" because he knew he "didn't have a chance," Pemberton explained.

W. K. Andrews, a member of the CAB panel investigating the crash, gave the first indication the P-38 may have been a retired racer.

He asked Paul Aubin, president of the Universal Air and Marine Supply Co. here, who was selling the plane to the Bolivian government, if he knew "whether it was modified for racing purposes."

Aubin said he did not.

Not Told Plane's History

Andrews inquired if Aubin ever had told Maj. German Pol the history of the P-38.

Aubin said he had not.

Major Pol, a friend and fellow pilot of Bridoux's, witnessed the crash with Aubin at National Airport.

"Have you ever been to the Cleveland air races?" was Andrews' next question. Aubin said he had not.

Andrews then pointed out that the registry number of the P-38 was NX126927, the "X" designating "experimental" aircraft to distinguish it from commercial. Some racing planes are issued an "NX" number, CAA officials said.

Also, Andrews added, there was a number "48" on the nose of the P-38. He asked Aubin:

"What significance did the large

Truman May Move This Week to Avert New Walkout in Coal

Surprise Action By UMW Chieftain Is Not Discounted; Talks at Standstill

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

President Truman is expected to make the next Government move in the coal dispute.

With direct negotiations between the mine operators and United Mine Workers in a state of collapse and with mediation activity at a virtual standstill, it appeared last night that the White House would initiate the next step toward a solution of the contract deadlock.

There is always the possibility that the unpredictable John L. Lewis, who loves to come up with surprises—especially when they get him out of a hole—may yet come up with a surprise maneuver that will result in his obtaining contract "improvements" for his miners.

Returned After 52 Days

Otherwise, it is believed President Truman will take some action this week to prevent another walkout by the soft-coal miners, threatened for December 1. The miners stayed out 52 days and were ordered temporarily back to the pits last Wednesday by Lewis.

Officials close to the White House say the President has not yet made up his mind what to do on coal. Thus far, he has chosen to sit tight and let Cyrus S. Ching, director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, carry the ball for the Government.

After separate conferences with Lewis and the operators in the past 10 days, and a snub by Lewis to Ching's invitation for a joint mediation session, Ching is believed to be ready to make a final—and personal—report to the President early this week.

Ching's Role Stressed

Ching has kept to himself what he will recommend to the White House. However, it is now known it was Ching who argued and helped induce the President to establish a fact-finding board in the steel dispute.

The fact is that the board—by recommending no wage increases, but, instead, noncontributory pensions—narrowed the field of controversy between the steel corporations and the CIO Steelworkers and thereby set up the basis for the settlement.

Thus, it is believed the President will offer to set up a fact-finding board in coal, and, should Lewis refuse to cooperate with such a panel, as he has indicated, the President would, from the political point of view, be in a better position to apply the antistrike injunction provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act against the miners.

The steel fact-finding committee's recommendations did not pre-

One Third of the Nation

Incomes of 10 Million Families Found Under $2000 in 1948

The importance to the Nation's economy of raising the living standards of its low-income groups through vocational or academic education once again is getting Congressional attention.

The make-up of families getting less than $2000 a year—of which there are 10 million or almost a third of the Nation's total—was outlined yesterday in a study by a staff of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report.

Since "the low purchasing power of these families retards the economic progress of the Nation," Senator Sparkman (D., Ala), chairman of the subcommittee directing the work, ordered copies sent to all members of the full committee.

Easily the most definite recommendation of the report was that for making higher education available to all as a measure of raising living standards and increasing opportunities.

Of all low-income families not on farms headed by persons between 24 and 64 years of age, 64 percent are headed by persons who had not gone beyond the eighth grade, the report declares. Only 8 percent had gone beyond high school.

"Lack of education for a better-paying occupation thus appears as an important cause of low income," the report states, and adds:

"More important, however, is the fact that educational opportunity, at least beyond the grade-school level, still greatly depends upon the income status of the child's family. Low incomes result from lack of education and lack of education for the next generation results from the low incomes of the present, a process which tends to stratify the population.

"Broadening educational opportunities, both academic and vocational, for all qualified students regardless of present income status, is not only a most promising long-range attack on the low-income problem, but it is also absolutely necessary to preserve the American tradition of equal opportunity for all."

The report divides low-income

Missing Girl Calls Parents, Is Reunited

Garey Family Home From Philadelphia After Lucille Phones

Thirteen-year-old Lucille Garey came back to her anxious parents early this morning after leaving her home 14 days ago without a word "to carve out a career for herself."

Lucille and her parents were tearfully reunited several hours after receiving a telephone call from Lucille who told her parents she was in Philadelphia and ready to come home.

Her father, Thomas F. Garey, a Defense Department consulting engineer, who flew home from Tokio upon hearing of Lucille's disappearance, and Mrs. Garey immediately drove in the family car to Philadelphia.

At Station

They found her at Broad Street Station from whence she called home collect.

Recounting the reunion later, her father said: "Her mother was crying . . . I was crying . . . Lucille, too . . ."

The first thing Lucille wanted, he said, was food—"So I bought her a big steak dinner."

"She ate her's and mine both. I also bought her a new pair of shoes. She had worn hers out walking . . ."

On their way home to 1925 Park rd. nw., the parents learned that Lucille left with $15 in her pocket.

Chest Warns Higher Goal Means Work

Luchs Says Donations To Date Don't Show Big Enough Increase

A reminder that the 1950 Community Chest campaign is trying to raise $550,000 more than the $3,441,719 attained last year was issued yesterday by Frank J. Luchs, general chairman.

"This means an over-all increase of 16 percent to be picked up through renewed work on the part of all the soliciting units," Luchs said.

"Our analysis of early returns indicates a greater percentage of donors where business firms and professional offices have completed their campaigns—but we are not getting an over-all increase from the same firms and employes anywhere near approaching the minimum 16 percent," Luchs declared.

230,572 Pledges In

While the chairman expressed appreciation for ground already covered he warned that "we are getting more donors, but nothing like the 70,000 required to lift last year's 334,000 givers to the hoped-for 400,000 this year."

The 1950 Community Chest Federation campaign for $3,991,719 now has reached 61.26 percent of the goal.

A total of 230,572 pledges has been reported, accounting for $2,445,176.91, Luchs revealed.

Business No. 1 Unit reported encouraging signs with 50,000 subscribers enrolled to date for a total of $922,603.44, compared with only $524,049 at a similar period in the 1948 drive.

Average Gift Is Higher

The Government Unit reported 73.74 percent of its $1,585,411 quota already reached, with 162,620 givers pledging a total of $1,169,061.

The unit reported that the average gift is higher than last year's at a comparable date in the campaign.

All division leaders in the Government Unit have been told that because of the Armistice Day holiday the report meeting scheduled for Tuesday has been canceled and

Contempt Fines For Lewis, UMW To Be Paid Here

Cambridge, Ohio, Nov. 12 (AP).—The $1,420,000 fines for contempt against President John L. Lewis and the United Mine Workers will be paid Monday, a UMW spokesman said today.

John Owens, secretary-treasurer of the United Mine Workers of America, told a Cambridge newsman that he will pay the fines in United States District Court in Washington, D. C., at that time. Owens resides in Cambridge.

[The District of Columbia will get $840,000 of the fine money.]

The Supreme Court in effect upheld the fines last Monday.

They were imposed in connection with Lewis' refusal to halt the 1948 coal strike.

Heroic Rescues Made in Flame and Water Win Medals for Police and Firemen Here

SOUTHCOMB — MINNICK — YORK — DYKES

By Henry Mohland—The Washington Post
EICHOLTZ — FAIRALL — CLARK

Awards to police and firemen for meritorious service during the past two years were announced yesterday by the District Commissioners.

Gold medals, silver medals or bronze stars—the highest honors—were awarded to seven men. Three recipients were firemen; four were policemen. Thirty-nine others were awarded honorable mention, or given oral commendation.

The three gold medals and three silver medals awarded were all given for life-saving, or attempted life-saving. The one bronze star went to a policeman for capturing an armed robber.

Oral commendation was given to a group of 17 police officers for solving the murder of two taxi drivers in February, 1948, for which Lawrence J. and George A. Garner later were convicted and executed.

Similarly cited were three police privates for preventing a young soldier from making a suicide leap from a ninth-floor ledge on the Willard Hotel last June 3.

Awards will be presented at a Washington Board of Trade meeting November 28 at 8 p. m. in Lisner Auditorium. The period covered is the two years from July 1, 1947, through June 30, 1949, because the award committee, as one of its members put it, "got a little behind last year."

Twelve top awards could have been made for the two-year period. Five of the medals were not awarded, however, because no action seemed to merit them, a committee member said.

The awards follow:

Fireman—Pvt. George A. Clark, Truck Co. No. 4, for rescuing two children from a burning room at 435 L st. nw., January 4.

A total of 2387 ballots said "Yes, I favor radio broadcasts in streetcars and buses."

A total of 3015 ballots said "No, I do not favor radio broadcasts in streetcars and buses."

The percentages:

The balloting was done while the radio transit issue is under consideration by the District Public Utilities Commission, but the results were neither intended nor expected to influence the PUC decision. Neither was the balloting presented as a scientific poll, only as a vehicle for an expression of public sentiment.

The returns and comments indicate interest ranging from positive to vehement on the transit radio question on the part of 5402

Gdynia Line Agent Tells of Propaganda

By The Associated Press

A former official of a Polish shipping line broadcast has charged —and two-top officers of the company have denied—that the line broadcast propaganda here and helped finance a Communist newspaper in the United States.

The testimony, involving the dynia-American Line, was taken earlier this fall and released last night by a Senate Judiciary subcommittee studying proposals for new laws to block the entry of subversive aliens and to toss out any already here.

One of Gdynia-America's ships is the Batory, aboard which Gerhart Eisler, high-ranking Communist, stole away from the United States to beat deportation proceedings.

"We Succeeded"

Anthony Trzecieski, the witness who made the propaganda charge, told about that, too.

He said the company's president went to the Polish consul general's office in New York after Eisler had made his getaway and reported: "We succeeded."

Trzecieski testified that Gdynia-American Line, Inc., through a parent company, is owned by the Polish government

He also said that a purser of the line replied, "Yes, we are," when Trzecieski asked him about rumors that the line was smuggling aliens into the United States.

His testimony, taken at a closed session, also conained the statement that he resigned in December, 1947, as purchasing agent for the line, after being with the company 11 years, "because of the communistic control."

Testimony Contradicted

Trzecieski's testimony was contradicted practically in entirety by Roman M. Kutylowski, president of Gdynia-America, and Czeslaw Grzelak, vice president of the line. They, too, were neard in secret session.

Grzelak said Trzecieski didn't quit, he was fired.

Both Kutylowski and Grzelak denied that they knew Gerhart Eisler was aboard the Batory until they received a message from the captain saying that a stowaway had been discovered on the ship.

Eisler had been convicted of contempt of Congress and of hiding his Communist affiliations when he sought an earlier permit to leave the United States. He jumped bail to flee on the Batory. He was taken off the ship when it reached England but efforts to extradite him failed. He has since become minister of propaganda in the Russian zone of Germany.

Tells of Broadcasts

Trzecieski, now a naturalized American in the steamship supply business, said that weekly broadcasts put on by the Gdynia-America line in the Polish language were "propaganda to belittle everything that is being done here."

Kutylowski, the president of the line, called the broadcasts "radio advertising" and denied they contain propaganda.

He said, however, that the programs were intended "to have the people understand that everything is not bad in Poland and they shouldn't take the attitude of condemning everything."

Kutylowski acknowledged that a script writer for the program was recommended by the Polish Ambassador to the United States and that two earlier script writers were recommended by the Polish Consul General in New York.

He also said the consul suggested the broadcasts would be "a good idea." He said the script writer prior to the one presently employed was paid by the Polish government and had his office in the consulate.

Trzecieski told the committee that the line "to a great extent is financing" the Nowa Epoka, which he referred to as Communist foreign language weekly.

This was denied by Grzelak and Kutylowski. Kutylowski said the line only pays regular advertising rates. He said he would not call the Nowa Epoka a Communist paper.

Trzecieski had left the company before Eisler's flight on the Batory but he said that after the ship pulled out, Kutylowski went from the pier to the Polish consul general's office in New York.

He said he had knowledge but "no documentary proof" that on arriving there Kutylowski said to Consul General Jan Galewicz: "We succeeded."

He also testified that "there were strong suspicions that Eisler spent the three days prior to sailing in tre consulate building."

Kutlyowski, in denying he knew of Eisler's presence on the ship when it sailed, said first he did not go to the consulate that day. "I do not remember and I had no occasion to go."

Foes Reported Massing for Battle of China

Hongkong, Nov. 12 (U.P.)—Both sides in the Chinese civil war today were reported massing troops for a battle which may decide the fate of China.

Nationalist Gen. Pai Chung-hsi was reported rushing crack units of his Kwangsi army to the Kweiyang front, south of Chungking, in an effort to stem the Reds' menacing westward march.

Three Communist army groups —at least 200,000 men—were reported on their way from North China to reinforce the Communist drive against dwindling Nationalist China.

Red forces on the Kweiyang front reportedly had reached Hwangping, 90 miles east of Kweiyang.

Official sources confirmed today that the defensive forces at Kienkiang, 130 miles east of Chungking, had been weakened by the desertion of two regiments to the Communists.

Communist sources here predicted that China would be "completely liberated" shortly after next New Year's Day. It was believed that the attack on Chungking would be led by one-eyed Red Gen. Liu Po-chen, a native of Szechuan Province, where the National capital is located.

The State Department yesterday disclosed new failures in the efforts to get information from Chinese Communists about American Consul General Angus Ward, in jail at Mukden.

A message received from Vice Consul William N. Stokes at Mukden said he had been able to send new packages of food and clothing to Ward and the four consulate employes held with him. However, he had not been able to obtain information on the health, treatment, date of trial or date of release of the jailed men.

Requests for information have been made to Communist China's national leaders at Peiping by Consul General O. Edmund Clubb. He also has been rebuffed.

Ward, two American citizens on his staff and two European citizens he employed were arrested October 24 on charges of having beaten a Chinese employe of the consulate two weeks earlier.

State Department officials suspect that the whole thing may have been a frameup by the Mukden Communist authorities to discredit the American Government among local Chinese.

State Department officials so far have been able to figure out little they can do about it. They say they must keep in mind that the safety of Ward and his associates as well as of other nonarrested members of the consulate at Mukden is the primary objective—also that the United States has no real power inside Communist China.

What does appear to be developing here as a possible means of pressure for Ward's release is an argument that the Communist conduct at Mukden and the aloof attitude taken by the Communist government leaders at Peiping proves the Chinese Reds are unfit for recognition at this stage by the United States or any other Western power.

Mayor a Victim

12 Killed In Collapse Of Town Hall

Bogota, Colombia, Nov. 12 (AP).—The Liberal newspaper El Tiempo said today the newly appointed mayor of Yacopi and 11 others had been killed by "the collapse" of the town hall.

(This dispatch, which passed through Colombian censorship, did not explain what caused the collapse.)

Yacopi is in the Cundinamarca department, in which Bogota is situated.

There were rumors the building was dynamited.

If so, this would be the first incident of violence since the nation was placed under virtual martial law by President Ospina.

The mayor of Yacopi, Cesar Llanos, had just been appointed by the Conservative government. El Tiempo said a strong detachment of troops was assigned to Yacopi before the "tragic accident."

World Group Of Veterans Is Forming

Paris, Nov. 12 (NYHT).—A movement to organize an International Veterans Association, possibly including former soldiers of Germany, Italy and Austria, has been started in Paris.

Membership qualifications outlined at a meeting of American, French and Belgian veterans specify that Communists and Fascists are to be excluded.

According to those who hope to launch the organization formally here next summer, the objective would be to unite all veterans "who are democratically minded and who believe in peace without sacrifice of liberty."

Gilbert A. Harrison, national chairman of the American Veterans Committee, was the United States representative. French hosts described it as the first contact they knew of to form a world association of former fighting men.

Army Spreads Promises of Aid Over Europe

London, Nov. 12 (U.P.)—United States Army experts fanned out through western Europe today to translate American promises to the Atlantic Pact nations into shipments of military equipment.

A 10-man team arrived here early today from Washington. Similar missions reached Rome and Oslo late yesterday, seeking on-the-spot information on needs under the over-all plan to defend western Europe.

Negotiations will start Monday, officials said, with the London group meeting all the Brussels pact states and the Oslo group traveling to Copenhagen later.

The United States Congress already has approved the transfer of 450 million dollars worth of surplus war equipment to the Atlantic treaty nations, plus 500 million dollars cash and a similar amount in contract authority for further supplies.

News Sweeps Empire: Prince Toddles on Eve of Birthday

London, Nov. 12 (AP).—The No. 1 baby of the British Empire will be 1 year old Monday.

Charles Philip Arthur George, Prince of Edinburgh, is doing all right.

He's plump, he's healthy and life is good—except of course when his pants get wet or his teeth hurt him, as whose don't at the age of 1, even if he is a future King of England?

A democratic chap, Charles can be seen almost any fine afternoon taking the sun in Green Park, not far from Clarence House, the London home of his parents, Princess Elizabeth and Prince Philip.

With Charles you usually will find two nurses, a detective and a frisky white terrier.

Face Round, Legs Chubby

Charles is dressed plainly. His blond hair is cut short. His face is round and full. His legs are strong and chubby.

The royal family is said to consider that Charles has his mother's eyes and his father's nose and chin.

Charles has just taken his first steps alone.

Official court correspondents flashed the news around the empire today. Also, they reported, he has six teeth, and weighs 24½ pounds. What's more he says three words distinctly:

"Mum-mums" for his mother.
"Papa" for Prince Philip.
"Nan-nan,' for his "nanny," Miss Helen Lightbody.

Likes Tins and Boxes

Charles is said to be an excellent doer at meal times. If he thinks the food is a little slow arriving he is apt to bang his chair with a spoon.

In fact, he dotes on noises he makes himself and is showing more interest in tins and boxes than in his more conventional toys.

Little fuss is being made about his birthday party. King George has laid down a policy of keeping these family celebrations as private as possible.

Charles' birthday cake will be something special, however. It's a rum-flavored 40-pounder built and baked by 20 students of the Manchester College of Technology. The decorations include a single orange candle, a teddy bear wearing a bed cap, a lamb, a rabbit, a squirrel holding an acorn—and a tiny crown. Icing across the top says "Happy Birthday Prince Charles."

Plot on Life Of Quirino Is Reported

Manila, Philippines, Nov. 12. (AP).—Reliable sources said today that the guard at the presidential palace, doubled during the hotly fought elections which took a toll of 40 lives, had been further strengthened as the result of a reported plot to kill President Elpidio Quirino.

They said unidentified plotters had schemed to slip three or four assassins into Malacanan palace in the daily crowd of callers.

Returns trickling in from remote sections widened Quirino's lead over Jose P. Laurel, Nacionalista candidate.

Latest returns gave Quirino 1,578,963 votes against 1,132,672 for Laurel. Jose Avelino, candidate of a dissident faction of Quirino's Liberal Party, trailed with 400,533.

U. N. Approves Plan For Italy's Colonies

Cold Spring Harbor, N. Y., Nov. 12 (U.P.)—State police said today they believed an anonymous telephone threat to burn down the Long Island home of former Senator John Foster Dulles was the work of a "crank," but they announced they have set up a day and night guard, nevertheless.

The call was reported by Dulles after the house of his brother, Allen Dulles, burned Monday. Police believe the fire was caused by a defective oil burner. Investigators have been unable to find any trace of arson.

Thomas Tells Of Snub, Hints It's by Swedes

Vienna, Austria, Nov. 12 (AP).—Senator Elmer Thomas (D., Okla.), said today one European country had snubbed his Armed Forces Subcommittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee and "any more money granted to that country will be over my protest."

Thomas did not name the country, but congressional members of his party said he was referring to Sweden. (Sweden got 79 million dollars in Marshall Plan aid so far.)

"The government officials," Thomas told newsmen, "acted as if they did not know we were within a thousand miles of the place. The country I refer to has helped no one in the last 135 years. Anyone with a military uniform on in that country is a spy. They saw some easy money and they grabbed it—now they want more."

The seven-man subcommittee is investigating the use of American aid funds.

In addition to Thomas, the committee includes Senators Maybank (D., S. C.), McClellan (D., Ark.), Robertson (D., Va.), Thye (R., Minn.), Stennis D., Miss.), and Chavez (D., N. M.).

A member of the group said: "We have discussed at great length the wonderful receptions we were given in Brussels, Oslo, Copenhaven, Frankfurt and Bern. We have not been able to say anything nice about Stockholm."

Czechs Phone Slavs Again

Prague, Czechoslovakia, Nov. 12 (U.P.)—Telephone communications with Yugoslavia were restored tonight after a brief interruption due to "technical difficulties."

Trainer Injured In Fight of 10 Lions Over Lioness

Atlanta, Nov. 12 (AP).—Ten lions fighting over a lioness battled their trainer for 10 minutes today as an audience at an indoor circus screamed in terror.

Dick Clemens, veteran wild animal trainer suffered a wrenched knee. Several lions were chewed and cut.

The trainer was hurt when he got his leg caught between two fighting animals as he tried to separate them.

Clemens beat the fighting beasts with a wooden pole. One enraged lion snapped it in two and Clemens continued his battle with the broken pole.

He said the trouble started "between new and old animals over a she-lion."

Gomulka Reported Purged by Polish Communist Party

Warsaw (Sunday), Nov. 13 (AP).—Reliable sources reported today that former Vice Premier Wladyslaw Gomulka has been purged from the Polish United Workers (Communist) party.

These informants said the party's central committee had acted during a three-day meeting just ended. The meeting was understood to have been devoted chiefly to the question of Titoism.

Gen. Marian Spychalski, minister of construction, also was reported to have been accused of deviationism. Spychalski preceded Gen. Edward Ochab as vice minister of national defense.

Police Find No Plot Against Judge Medina

New York, Nov. 12 (U.P.)—Brooklyn police announced tonight, after an all-day investigation, that there definitely has been no plot to "do away" with Federal Judge Harold R. Medina, presiding judge at the recent trial of 11 top United States Communists.

Two men had reported the alleged plot to the FBI.

Czechs Rule Church Marriages Invalid

Prague, Nov. 12 (U.P.).—The Communist government announced today that church marriages will not be recognized in Czechoslovakia after January 1.

It also declared it will not accept the qualified oath of loyalty that Catholic bishops have advised their priests to take.

Both pronouncements were made by Minister of Interior Vaclav Nosek shortly after President Klement Gottwald reelased 153 Catholic laymen from prison.

Nosek asserted that only marriages performed before the Communist-created national committees (town and village authorities) will be legal after January 1.

A Catholic couple may have a church service also, but Nosek said it will have no legal standing.

Nosek said the state acted after a priest had refused to marry a couple because they were Communists. The priest was arrested, he said.

The Interior Minister said Czechoslovakia's 7000 priests must swear complete allegiance to the Communist state.

So far, the state has set no date for the loyalty oath. The real test will come when the oath is demanded.

Gottwald's announcement of amnesty for 153 Catholic laymen said he had acted because they had committed their acts against the republic while "under the influence of Vatican policy."

The President said they had realized their guilt and had asked for clemency.

The new marriage regulations also include one that ends the posting of marriage banns and another that abolishes the status of separation.

They are embodied in a civil law now before the Communist-dominated National Assembly. Its passage is assured.

The measure also provides that divorces will be granted only "when the marriage cannot fulfill its social functions." Divorce will be "made difficult if under-age children are involved," the law warns.

Despite "propaganda from the Vatican, reactionaries and the Western radio . . . it already is the impression in the West that the Church is slowly losing in its fight against the state authority and the new regime," Nosek declared.

The Papal excommunication decree is not being carried out—but for small exceptions—because in the twentieth century the methods of cures and excommunications do not have any effect," the minister said.

Bolsheviks Help Church Resume Role

(Ninth in a Series)

By Joseph Newman

Paris, Nov. 12 (NYHT).—The istic regime, which combats religion as the opiate of the people, is now helping the Russian Orthodox Church to resume the role which it played under the czars for centuries—the role of serving Holy Russia.

This church, the principal one in the Soviet Union, may never recover the power of which it was stripped by the Bolsheviks, but it can now count on their quiet support in exchange for unofficial services.

Scattered and broken after many years of Bolshevik persecution, the church was given a blood transfusion during the war and was permitted to come to terms with the Soviet state. It served to mobilize the deeply religious Russian masses and in raising large sums of money.

Created Affairs Council

In July, 1944, the government created a Council on Affairs of the Russian Orthodox Church to handle all matters between the state and the church. At the same time, the government created a Council of Religious Cults which handled relations with all other religious denominations, including the Moslem, Catholic, Jewish and Lutheran.

Under this separation the Russian Orthodox Church was preeminent and was not to be confused with the others. The new council made it possible for the government to deal both secretly and officially with the former state church.

Some thought the modus vivendi would not prosper after the war, but it was soon apparent the Orthodox Church could continue to be useful.

Though Soviet borders were sealed tighter than before, church dignitaries began to move in and out of the country with considerable frequency.

Soviet Armies Followed

Orthodox priests followed the Soviet armies into eastern Europe. Some went into western Europe and especially France. Others crossed the Atlantic to America.

The latter were interested in bringing the Russian Orthodox Church in the United States back to the bosom of the mother church in Moscow, from which it had broken after the revolution. But the American church balked at the idea of having its authorities appointed by a mother church located only a short distance from the Kremlin.

In January, 1948, after the Soviet Union had declared the world divided into two irreconcilable camps and had called for one to overthrow the other, the Orthodox Church summoned all the faithful to follow it into the Soviet camp. Six months later, an international conference of Eastern Orthodox churches was held in Moscow.

Agreement Reached

The assembly agreed to establish a closer union among the Eastern churches and to recognize the leadership of the Moscow Patriarch in achieving it. The decision cleared the way for the extension of Soviet influence to the religious peoples of the East and provided a spiritual handmaiden for the recently organized Communist Information Bureau. The Moscow Patriarch was closer to becoming the Pope of eastern Europe.

The press campaign against religion, temporarily suspended during the visit of the churchmen, was resumed soon after they left. The Communist Party would continue to combat religion on the one hand while permitting the church to exercise its influence on behalf of the Soviet state on the other.

This policy has a parallel in the Soviet attitude toward the Moslems, second largest religious group in the country. Moslem pilgrims permitted to visit Mecca in 1947 returned with the report that they had spread the Soviet gospel in Arab countries along the way.

But the government was uncompromising with those churches beyond its control.

Acheson Meets U. S. European Chiefs at Heidelberg

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

Acheson May List Role of West Germans

Frankfurt, Germany, Nov. 12 (U.P.).—Secretary of State Dean Acheson travels to Bonn Sunday. There, it is believed, he will tell Chancellor Konrad Adenauer and other top Germans that from now on Western Germany will be counted on for a big economic, and possibly even military, part in the battle against communism.

Reliable sources said Acheson will tell the Germans that the Americans, British and French have agreed to:

1. Revise the dismantling program (for reparations);

2. Admit West Germany and the Saar as associate members of the Council of Europe.

Acheson has not disclosed one word of Paris conference results since his arrival here yesterday. He has talked exclusively to the men who were at Paris with him, notably High Commissioner John J. McCloy, and has seen few others.

Today Acheson, accompanied by McCloy and U. S. Ambassador to Britain Lewis Douglas, drove to Heidelberg to meet American military leaders in Germany.

The visit was confined to 90 minutes around a luncheon table at the swank Schloss Hotel. With German waiters scurrying in and out, a top-secret discussion could hardly be carried on.

The 18 guests included Gen. Thomas Handy, commander of U. S. armed forces here, and Lieut. Gens. Clarence Huebner and John K. Cannon, Army and Air Forces chiefs.

Tonight Acheson was the guest of honor at a reception and dinner given by McCloy at the high commissioner's residence in Bad Homburg. It was his opportunity to meet McCloy's "cabinet," his top advisers.

Acheson's eight-hour visit to the West German capital Sunday will be followed by a hurry-up trip to Berlin Monday morning. He will leave for the United States from Berlin late Monday.

Pay Hike Demands

Greek Labor Hits Porter; Strike Looms

Athens, Nov. 12 (AP).—Widespread strikes loomed today in Greece, two days after the Marshall plan chief for the country, Paul Porter, asserted there was "absolutely no justification" for wage increases at this time.

There have been minor rumblings in past weeks from labor centers indicating flat demands would be made for general 40 percent wage increases.

The General Confederation of Labor issued a statement saying it was "regrettable" that ECA chief Porter had been "misled" by the government, which the labor group said is seeking to fortify itself in order to "protect the iniquitous interests of those who exploit the people."

The confederation, which includes all labor organizations in Greece, said it would not reply to Porter with words, but to the government by acts.

At Salonika American radio engineers are working round the clock on a 50,000-watt Voice of America transmitter which is to start boring holes in the Iron Curtain by the end of the year.

Sub Builders Guilty In Dismantling Case

Hamburg, Germany, Nov. 12 (AP). The owners of Germany's largest shipyard, which turned out Nazi submarines and flying boats during the war, were found guilty today of trying to dodge Allied dismantling orders.

A British court ordered Rudolf Bloehm, senior partner of Bloehm and Voss, to pay a fine of 5000 marks ($1250) or serve five years in prison. His brother, Walter, was fined 100 marks ($250) with an alternate prison sentence of 10 months.

Four other defendants were sentenced to prison, but all sentences were suspended pending an appeal.

Argentina Reds Slip

Buenos Aires, Argentina, Nov. 12 (U.P.).—Communism appeared today to be nearing the end of its official life in Argentina as authorities in two states rebuked the party while its Buenos Aires headquarters remained padlocked.

Yugoslavia Accuses Albania, Junks Treaty of Friendship

Belgrade, Yugoslavia, Nov. 12 (AP).—Yugoslavia today junked her treaty of friendship and alliance with Albania, 10 days after delivering a virtual ultimatum to her little southern neighbor.

Marshal Tito's government charged that Albania, goaded by Soviet Russia and her eastern European dependencies, committed unfriendly acts.

In a note of November 2, Yugoslavia sharply told Albania to stop these hostile gestures and to live up to the terms of their 1947 friendship treaty. A reply was demanded "within the shortest possible time."

Albania ignored the demand.

It was the first time that Yugoslavia, bagdered for months by Russia and her Balkan followers, has taken the initiative in scrapping one of the alliances that formerly bound them together.

Earlier, after campaigns of mutual abuse and accusation, Russia, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Romania, Hungary and Bulgaria severed treaty ties with Belgrade. Diplomatic relations, however, continue.

Air Force Gets New B-50D Superforts

Seattle, Nov. 12. (AP).—Boeing Airplane Company announced today its delivery to the U. S. Air Force of new Superfortresses with a 28,000-pound bomb capacity.

The new version of the famed wartime B-29 bombers is the B-50D.

Its top speed is reported at "more than 400 miles an hour"; its range at "more than 6000 miles with load."

Prague Hits Hoarding

Prague, Nov. 12 (U.P.).—The official government radio called on Czech citizens tonight to stop hoarding coins, a practice which has become so widespread that streetcar conductors and newsstand vendors can't make change any more.

Soviets Offer Atomic Data

worked out, but Gen. Andrew G. L. McNaughton of Canada said the majority plan might take "several years" to reach full control. Hickerson indorsed a British estimate that if the Russians had agreed to the majority plan in 1946, control might now have been reached. "The sooner the better," Hickerson said.

4. Drew the first American indication of how quota controls might work out. Frederick H. Osborn, American atomic negotiator, said quotas would be based on an index of needs, taking account of the size of population, state of industralization and consumption of power.

5. Shied away from answering an American challenge to tell the world what the Soviet Union is doing to share its claimed knowledge of peaceful atomic uses.

Attacking the majority plan for the U. N.—instead of national operation—of major atomic activities, Vishinsky rejected any international organ with "the right of ownership, the right of mastery and domination, the right to do whatever it wants to do in all countries of the world, particularly if that organ has in charge of it such a chummy little company as has its own agreed political line, which has sung in harmony in the same key.

"And what is that line, what is that policy? That policy is to prevent the Soviet Union and the countries of the people's democracies from developing their economies and their industries, their lives and their standard of living."

U. N. Approves Plan For Italy's Colonies

Lake Success, Nov. 12 (NYHT). The political committee of the United Nations General Assembly in an overtime session today approved by a 49-to-1 vote a resolution to dispose of the former Italian colonies.

The vote was interpreted as assurance the plan will have no difficulty winning the two-thirds majority vote necessary in the General Assembly this week.

The resolution creates two new nations—a united and independent Libya in two years and an independent Somaliland in 10 years—and grants the people of Eritrea the privilage of selecting their own government in the future.

Burglar Also Early Christmas 'Shopper'

Toronto, Ont., Nov. 12 (AP).—George Adams congratulated himself yesterday — his Christmas shopping was finished, neatly wraapped and tied with ribbons.

Today he has to start all over again. A burglar entered his west-end home last night and took the lot and $55 in cash.

Low Income Linked To Education Lag

families by the sex of the family head and by age, racial and employment divisions. The composition of the entire group is summarized in eight paragraphs.

1. Of the 10 million, a third, or about 3.3 million, lived on farms. Of this 3.3 million, half, or 1.7 million, had incomes below $1000.

"Raising the level of living of low-income farmers calls for measures specifically designed for that purpose and differing sharply from measures to raise the production and consumption of urban workers," the report states.

"It also calls for measures quite different from the general agricultural price-support and soil-conservation programs. Continually depressed rural farm areas might best be helped by long-range area-development programs which would provide opportunities of industrial employment. These also would provide markets for special agricultural products such as vegetables and milk."

2. The problem of impoverished old age is one of the most difficult and important. Of 6.3 million nonfarm families with less than $2000 incomes, more than a fourth, or 1.7 million, were headed by persons over 65. This is half of all American families in this age group.

Some Want to Work

"Many such persons are able and want to continue to work, either on a full or part-time basis," the report says. "In a highly specialized economy such as ours it must be possible to find ways of prolonging their productive life."

3. There is one sizable group who "for one reason or another cannot be made producing members," the report states. "These nonearners, however, are still consumers, and their consumption is maintained, at least partially, through social insurance and public assistance programs."

4. Unskilled and semiskilled workers make up the "hard core" of the urban low-income group. They number about 2.2 million. Raising their level of living, the report says, must involve raising their productivity, "perhaps by long-range programs of vocational and academic education."

The report here points out that economic progress has greatly reduced common labor jobs. "Wielders of pick and shovel have been gradually replaced by excavating machinery," the report states, citing an example. This must be fostered, not only by encouragement of technical progress but progress on the human side, as well, it says.

Wage Legislation Backed

In this group, the analysts point out, low incomes "may be partially explained as the result of their poor bargaining strength.

"Besides the problem of raising productivity, there exists in some industries and localities a separate problem of insuring that workers receive full compensation.

"Minimum-wage legislation is, therefore, germane . . ."

5. Nonwhite families make up a significant group of low-income families. Of nonfarm families in the less-than-$2000 group, one in eight, or about 800,000, are nonwhite.

This proportion is "considerably greater than the proportion of nonwhites in the general population," the report points out.

"Broadening educational and vocational opportunities for the Negro may be a constructive method of attacking the low-income problem."

6. Of the 6.3 million urban families in the low-income group, 1.5 million were headed by women. These families, broken by widowhood, desertion or divorce, provide a problem for which the report recommends expansion of aid to dependent children as a palliative.

Rehabilitation Urged

7. "Low-income families are, as would be expected, headed by persons with little education," the report asserts. Of the nonfarm families headed by persons between 25 and 64 years old, 64 percent had not gone beyond the eighth grade. Only 6 percent had gone beyond high school.

8. Disabled persons in need of vocational rehabilitation number about 1.5 million, and they are found in the low-income group. "Expansion of existing programs of rehabilitation deserves consideration," the report says.

In its study of family incomes, the report says that there are 1.1 million families—almost 3 percent—with incomes above $10,000 a year. The greatest numbers are to be found as follows:

In the group getting between $3000 and $4000 a year, eight million families, or 20.7 percent of all.

Those getting between $2000 and $3000 a year, 7.9 million families, or 20.6 percent.

Washington Figure Cited

Five million families get between $4000 and $500 a year; 3.1 million between $5000 and $6000.

The report comments also on the circumstances of city families with less than $2000 and farm families of less than $1000.

"These figures," the report warns, "are not intended to be and must not be interpreted to be, a definition of 'low' income.

The boundary line between want and sufficiency is difficult to determine . . .

"For example," it continues, "the Bureau of Labor Statistics has estimated that in 1947 the minimum budget necessary for a family of four to maintain an "adequate standard of living" varied from a low of $3004 in New Orleans to a high of $3458 in Washington, D. C.

"Using similar methods, the Social Security Administration estimated that a budget for an elderly couple living at the same level would have required $1365 a year in Houston, Tex., and $1767 in Washington, D. C. in June, 1947."

'Great Undeveloped Market'

The report also declares that the proportion of a family's income spent for food decreases as the income increases. Food takes about half the income of city families getting less than $2000 a year.

But for a family with only $1000 a year it amounts to 74 percent. This proportion decreases as income goes up, until it amounts to only 17 percent for families getting above $7500.

On the other hand, families in the $2000 group spent only about $6 a person per week for food. The average is $17 a week for families above that income level.

The poor use more grains, and less milk, meat, vegetables and fruits than the well-to-do.

"Besides the great importance of improving American diets, these facts indicate that the domestic market for our agricultural surpluses could be greatly expanded by raising the income of the poor," the report declares.

"Low-income families are a great underdeveloped market for America's farm production."

Albuquerque, N. Mex., Nov. 12. (AP).—Senator Clinton P. Anderson (D., N. Mex.) said today "There's no question that Julius A. Krug was let out because he kept pressing for reclamation projects."

He had an obligation to do so, Anderson added, "and I'm glad that he did."

Anderson is a former Secretary of Agriculture in President Truman's Cabinet.

In an Albuquerque Tribune interview, he praised Oscar L. Chapman who was nominated yesterday to succeed Krug, and added:

"But it is no secret that I was very fond of Cap Krug. I am sorry he was blamed for asking for appropriations projects which were not approved by the Bureau of the Budget . . .

"I would hate to see him crucified for asking for those things which in the 1948 campaign he said he stood for. He went about the country telling people that Truman stood for progress and reclamation.

"If Krug's campaign activities mean anything, he was obligated to keep pushing for them. Incidentally, you won't find much in the Constitution about the Bureau of the Budget."

Asked if President Truman now is opposed to reclamation projects, Senator Anderson replied:

"President Truman has not changed his mind about these projects, but he has an over-all responsibility as President as to a budget for all activities and reclamation cannot be allowed to get out of line."

$4 Millions Put Up to Backstop Rancher

The Government puts up almost four million dollars this year to guarantee one farmer against loss in his widespread farming operations, one of the largest in the country.

This vast amount was lent on crops raised on the 52,500-acre Russell Giffen plantation in California's San Joaquin Valley.

Giffen's ranch is one of the properties recently bought by a tax-free charitable trust, the Rancho San Bernardo, set up in Omaha by Gordon Diesing, 43-year-old Omaha lawyer.

Borrowings Enumerated

Under terms of the articles of incorporation of the Rancho San Bernardo, profits were to go to another tax-free corporation, the Sacred Heart Foundation Fund. The latter was set up to administer the funds for the benefit of two Catholic orders, the Trappist Monasteries in Kentucky, Georgia, Utah and New Mexico, and the Benedictine Sisters of Perpetual Adoration in Missouri.

According to records in the Production and Marketing Administration offices around Fresno, Calif., where the Giffen farms are situated, Giffen borrowed from the Government this year:

About $2,700,000 on his 1948 cotton crop.

Approximately $175,000 on his 1949 barley crop.

About $550,000 on wheat and approximately $375,000 on flaxseed.

In addition, agriculture officials in the San Joaquin Valley reported that Giffen raised many other crops, including 100 acres of melons.

Another taxfree corporation connected with the same taxfree foundation, the United States Wheat Corp., also incorporated in Nebraska, bought the world-famous Campbell wheat ranch near Hardin, Mont., from former Brig. Gen. Thomas D. Campbell.

That tremendous operation—95,000 acres—also was protected against loss by the Government. Recently the Commodity Credit Corp. took title to more than 200,000 bushels of 1948 wheat, on which it originally had lent Campbell about $400,00.

According to agricultural experts in Montana, Campbell netted, through this Government assistance, about 1 cents a bushel above the prevailing price for wheat in that area.

Campbell turned over to the Government about 4000 bushels of flaxseed, on which the Government had advanced more than $20,000 in a nonrecourse loan as provided under the price-support laws.

Both Giffen and Campbell, under the contract of sale, are to remain as managers of the properties under the tax-free trusts.

Although, under the setup, the new owners will not be required to pay the Government taxes on the earnings, they, at the same time, will be guaranteed by the Government against loss in their operations.

Father of 28 Claims Ontario Championship

Timmins, Ontario, Nov. 12 (U.P.).—Napoleon Lefebvre, 76, today claimed the title of Ontario's champion father.

He told investigators checking his application for old-age pension that he fathered 28 children and is grandfather or great-grandfather to some 100 others.

Lefebvre said the government interviewer suggested that instead of applying for a pension, he ask for a medal.

Filling Nourse Place on Economic Advisors Council Reported Facing Delay

By Alfred Friendly
Post Reporter

White House sources have indicated that for the time being it is probable no one will be named to fill the existing vacancy on the President's Council of Economic Advisors. Dr. Edwin G. Nourse, the former chairman, resigned November 1.

Although several names have been suggested to the White House, all have been inacceptable—or unaccepting.

Accordingly, the present plan appears to be to continue Vice Chairman Leon H. Keyserling as acting head, at least until after the Council finishes its next half-year economic report. This will be early in January.

At least two of the names suggested have been rejected by the Administration on the grounds that they are best utilized in their present positions.

They are Thomas C. Blaisdell, jr., Undersecretary of Commerce, and Willard L. Thorp, Assistant Secretary of State in charge of economic affairs.

A third person prominently mentioned was Winfield W. Riefler, special adviser to the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board. Riefler is said to be disinterested in the job, feeling that his present post is best for him.

The position of Council Chairman has been reportedly offered to Dr. Edward Mason, of the School of Business Administration, Harvard University. He is said to have turned it down.

Alabama Senators and several farm groups have plugged the candidacy of Russell Smith, legislative representative of the Farmers' Union. He was felt, however, to be too much a representative of a special group, and too little grounded as a professional economist.

NLRB Overrides Judgment of State Court In Ordering Company to Rehire War Veteran

By The Associated Press

A Tennessee company today was ordered to rehire a war veteran despite the company's reliance on a State court order.

The National Labor Relations Board in its opinion said an employer is liable if a discharge is illegal under the Taft-Hartley law even though he relies on a State court decision seemingly sanctioning his action.

The employe, Floyd Lee Thompson, was discharged by the Combustion Engineering Co., Inc., now merged into Combustion Engineering-Superheater Co., Inc., Chattanooga, Tenn.

At the time of the discharge, the NLRB opinion said, a contract requiring compulsory union membership had expired.

The AFL Boilermakers' Union asked for Thompson's discharge on the ground he refused to pay a $50 reinstatement fee when he returned from military service in 1947.

The company discharged the veteran after the court ruled the firm was under a contractual obligation to fire Thompson.

The NLRB said it agrees with the trial examiner's findings:

"1. The State court decree was merely a declaratory judgment and did not order the company to discharge Thompson.

"2. The contract, containing the maintenance-of-membership clause had expired, rendering moot the question decided by the State court."

Loss of Strength Seen for Labor Party in England

London, Nox. 12 (U.P.). — Emmanuel Shinwell, War Secretary, said tonight he believed his Labor Party might lose strength in the next general election.

"With the redistribution of seats (in the House of Commons), we may drop a seat here and there," Shinwell said. "I should not be surprised if our majority is reduced, but we are going back and they know it."

Truman May Act in Coal Dispute This Week

vent a steel strike, but its recommendations created a climate of opinion that forced the steel companies to change their position on pensions.

The companies had been arguing pensions were not negotiable until the contract with the Steelworkers runs out next May; and that they most certainly were opposed to noncontributory pensions, that is, pensions financed exclusively by the employers.

The fact-finding board ruled against steel employers on both counts. After a month's strike, Bethlehem Steel, the second largest producer, gave in to the union; other large companies fell in line; and late Friday night U. S. Steel, No. 1 producer, also agreed to $100-a-month pensions.

U. S. Steel led the fight against noncontributory pensions. Benjamin F. Fairless, its president, pointed out yesterday that, technically, the pension program is contributory in that part of the pension is made up of Social Security payments, toward which the worker contributes.

Out of more than a half-million Steelworkers in the strike, fewer than 100,000 still were out yesterday, and most of these will be reporting back to their jobs Monday as a result of pending agreements.

Major contracts still to be signed yesterday included Alleghany-Ludlum, Crucible, Pittsburgh Steel, Sharon Steel and Wheeling Steel.

26,000 Face Call

Doctors Told Of A-Bomb Mobilization

The dropping of the first atomic bomb on the United States will mean an all-out mobilization which will take at least 26,000 doctors from their normal civilian practice, Vice Admiral William M. Fechteler said yesterday.

The admiral, who is deputy chief of naval operations for personnel, was one of the speakers on a panel on medical reserve officers' problems, the closing event of the fifty-sixth annual convention of the Association of Military Surgeons of the United States.

The convention was held for three days at the Statler Hotel.

Admiral Fechteler said total war will mean that the armed forces will need all the 26,000 doctors now enrolled in their reserves, and more, but military men recognize that "our needs must be balanced and phased with the needs of the civilian population."

Local Personnel May Be Hit

To be specific, he continued, if a particular city is attacked with atomic bombs, the services might call up medical reserves in other areas to be sent in to the stricken city, rather than call the city's reservists.

One can make no assumptions about the casualties which would be suffered by medical personnel in such an attack, Admiral Fechteler said.

In Hiroshima, more than 90 percent of the doctors and nurses were casualties, and only three out of 45 civilian hospitals were usable, he reported, while in Nagasaki, an estimated 50 percent of the medical personnel were very shortly available for duty.

A discussion of Public Law 810, providing for retirement of reserve officers, stirred the greatest interest among the attending medical reserve officers of the various services.

Retirement at 60 Possible

Maj. Gen. Clovis E. Byers, USA, read a paper on the act written by Lieut. Gen. Edward H. Brooks, director of personnel and administration of the Army General Staff.

An active reservist who obtains enough "points" by attending drills, training sessions and other activities of reserve units, receives a retirement pension after 20 years of service, at age 60, the paper explained.

"This is an incentive measure, not a reward measure," General Byers said in answer to a number of critical questions from reserve physicians, who asked why civilian activities contributing to their professional skill would not count toward the required points.

Dr. Edward D. Churchill, a colonel in the Army reserve, said the medical profession will not keep the position it gained in the armed forces during the war "if we are timid and obstructive when confronted by change." Medical officers must take into account the fundamental changes going on in the defense establishment, he said.

Triplett Succeeds Boone

Other speakers were Brigadier General Thomas O. Hardin, chief of the Air Force reserve division; Capt. W. M. Sheppe, USNR, of Wheeling, W. Va.; Rear Admiral John W. Roper, Navy chief of personnel; Colonel Luke W. Finlay, executive officer of the Civilian Components Policy Board for the Secretary of Defense, and Brigadier General Richard L. Meiling, director of medical services for the Secretary of Defense.

Col. William N. Triplett of the Maryland National Guard was elected president of the group to succeed Rear Admiral Joel T. Boone. Other new officers include Dr. Robert C. Cook, Veterans Administration, first vice president, and Col. James M. Phalen, USA (ret.), secretary (reelected).

Admiral Boone laid a wreath at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier during the session on behalf of the Association of Military Surgeons.

Atlanta, Nov 12 (AP).—Two doctors today reported a top-flight German scientist had turned up another potential weapon against tuberculosis.

It's a new synthetic drug, derived from coal tar, known as TB-I for short. Full name is thio-semicarbazones.

The two doctors, Geoffrey Rake of New Brunswick, N. J., and H. Corwin Hinshaw of San Francisco, said large-scale tests of the new agent abroad have shown "encouraging results."

Shortly after the doctors' reports were delivered to the Eighth Streptomycin Conference sponsored by the Veterans' Administration two pharmaceutical houses said the compound would be made available to certain Government a. research agencies for clinical study.

The curative or arresting action of the formula was discovered by Dr. Gerhard Domagk of Elberfield, Germany, winner of the Nobel prize for developing sulfa drugs.

Dr. Hinshaw said the results obtained in 300 German hospitals "appeared promising."

The tests, he continued, were conducted on "several thousand" patients. Dr. Robe said tests were being made in the United States.

Both doctors were careful not to raise great hopes among the Nation's 500,000 tuberculosis victims, one of whom dies ever 11 minutes on the average.

British Doctor Quits State Setup, Hits Tragic Waste

Tunbridge Wells, Eng., Nov. 12. (AP).—Doctor 2108 quit the tax-supported national health service today and went back to private practice as Dr. E. F. St. John Lyburn.

"I revolt against the antiquarian methods of medicine as practiced in this country," Dr. Lyburn said.

"The 66,500,000 pounds ($186,200,000) spent on useless pills and bottles of medicine under the act has been tragically wasted," he said, adding that it should have been spent on "good modern sensible equipment."

He said that when the State Medical Service began July 5, 1948, he was the first doctor to announce publicly he would operate under it. He added he now was the first doctor to announce he would no longer do so.

UAW Will Seek Union Shop at General Motors

Detroit, Nov. 12 (U.P.).—The CIO United Auto Workers announced today that they will seek a union shop for all of General Motors' 265,000 production workers when negotiations begin next March.

UAW GM Director Thomas A. Johnstone said the union would ask a National Labor Relations Board election among GM workers as the first step toward a union shop for the biggest of the Nation's automakers.

Although all major auto companies are unionized, only the Ford Motor Co. in the "big three" has the union shop, sanctioned by an 88-to-1 margin at an election in June, 1948.

UAW sources said a similar demand will be served on Chrysler Corp. when its contract expires next spring.

Red Cross Bids Chief Goodbye

in—the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis.

O'Connor's successor, General George C. Marshall, principal speaker at the testimonial, hailed O'Connor for directing Red Cross activities during the war and for "demobilizing the organization's wartime activities."

At this point in his informal speech, General Marshall said declaratively:

"The Army also had a great demobilization and it was too rapid. They speak of the 'great menace' of armies. That menace is that they leave you too quickly."

Marshall singled out two other highlights in O'Connor's direction of the Red Cross. These were the establishment of its blood services—"one of the great efforts of history for doing good for people" and the charter revision of the Red Cross, which the New York lawyer guided through Congress. The board of governors, which with members of the society's national staff sponsored the dinner, was formed under this revision.

O'Connor had another warning to the organization. He urged it to think of the American Red Cross not as an entity of itself, but as part of the International Red Cross.

"Not all of us think that way now," he declared.

In a jocular mood—and with reference to one of General Marshall's contemporaries, Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower—O'Connor told the new Red Cross president not to feel "abashed over your new post.

"After all," he said, "the Red Cross has an 81-million-dollar budget. Columbia University has only a 16-million-dollar budget."

The national staff and board of governors presented Mrs. O'Connor with a silver wine service and gave O'Connor a leather-bound six-page parchment testimonial book. One section of it reads:

"We record here our belief that no man could have given more of himself than you gave during five years of constant thought, thousands of meetings, and almost continuous and wearing travel covering practically all the States of the Union and many countries of Europe and the Far East.

"In a very real sense, you brought Red Cross leadership and inspiration directly to the people."

Garey Girl Reaches Home

and a "few" more that she saved. She took a train to Baltimore on the afternoon of October 30.

Lucille said her first great obstacle toward finding work of any kind was lack of a Social Security card.

So in Baltimore she caught a bus for Pittsburgh where she almost succeeded in landing a job, but the lack of a Social Security card stymied her.

The discouragement almost caused Lucille to call home from there, but she determined to stick it out a while longer. After a couple of days in the city where she stayed in a Motel, she decided to try Philadelphia and traveled there.

The rest of her wanderings, her father reported, were all in Philadelphia. She spent most of her money for a room in a rooming house, and didn't have much left for food. She tried to get a job first as a clerk, and then as a receptionist, but Garey said, even though she looks older than her age, she didn't do so well in those attempts.

Then she decided to combine her job hunting with her need for food, and tried to get a job as a waitress — but the old bogie of Social Security card came back to haunt her.

According to Garey, she fully intended to inform her parents just as soon as she became independent and self-supporting, as soon as she got a job.

Her money ran out first, hence yesterday the telephone call at 1:30 p.m. Lucille, Garey said, was forced to the conclusion that her career was still school.

The Gareys are planning to take Lucille for a short vacation in Florida.

A student at Alice Deal Junior High School, Lucille left her home at 4:30 p. m., Oct. 30, to visit a friend and hadn't been heard from until yesterday.

Fight Over Girl Fatal To Fraternity Man

The Cads

Girls' Honor Debate Topic At Princeton

Princeton, N. J., Nov. 12 (AP).—Skirts may climb higher and necklines plunge lower, but—by Gadfrey, sir—Princeton men still believe every woman should defend her honor to her dying breath.

Longer, if necessary.

The Princeton men's views on the subject of honor were disclosed last night when a three-man Nassau debating team took on a trio from Yale.

Subject of the debate was: "Resolved, a Woman Should Choose Death Before Dishonor."

Princeton defended the resolution. The Yale men (the cads) took the negative.

The verbal tussle, in staid old Whig Hall, drew a capacity-plus audience. Watching 300 students fight their way into an auditorium designed to hold 250, one English professor expressed amazement over the sudden interest in debating.

He said, "debates have played to empty houses here since 1763 when teams from Princeton and Harvard debated the same dishonor vs. death resolution. There was standing room only then, too."

Just for the record, Yale won the debate.

Columbus, Ohio, Nov. 12 (U.P.).—A gay homecoming party and dance ended in tragedy early today when Ohio State University student James D. Heer, 21, fatally shot a fraternity brother after an argument over a girl.

"I get trigger happy whenever I get drunk," the former marine told police soon after he had shot down Jack T. McKeown, 21, in the middle of the street in front of the Delta Tau Delta house.

Heer, a pledge of the fraternity, is from Euclid, Ohio. He surrendered to police after a brief flight. Booked with him as a material witness was Joyce Crafton, 22, of Cleveland, Heer's weekend date. Police aid McKeown's death resulted from a fight over her.

The shooting occurred at 2:30 a. m. after a gay party on the eve of the Ohio State-Illinois football game.

Dean of Men Joseph A. Parks said cocktail parties at fraternity houses were "against university regulations."

"We are not certain there was such a cocktail party and we are trying to make sure of all the facts before taking any action against the fraternity," Parks said.

McKeown, managing editor of the Lantern, Ohio State student daily, was fatally shot in the abdomen when he tried to wrest the pistol from Heer. He was from Norwood, a suburb of Cincinnati.

"Apparently there was some kind of an argument just before Heer went upstairs in the fraternity house after the gun," Coroner Richard A. Evans said.

Police said the young men were fighting over Miss Crafton, who had been taken to the home of an aunt to spend the night before Heer shot McKeown.

Runaway Boys, Girl Jailed in Theft

Three runaway juveniles from Buffalo, N. Y., whose flight to Florida was halted near Woodbridge, Va., by Virginia State police on Thursday, will be returned to Pennsylvania today to face charges of auto larceny.

The trio, two 17-year-old boys and a 14-year-old girl, are in the Manassas Jail awaiting extradition on warrants sworn out by Pennsylvania police. They were apprehended by Virginia troopers after spending several nights in the woods near Woodbridge, where they said they hid out when their stolen auto ran out of gas.

Police said they used bloodhounds from Virginia Prison Camp 13 to track down the two boys after the girl gave herself up when she thought her companions had deserted her.

The girl, according to police, surrendered to a Woodbridge logger who previously had given the trio shelter in his cabin. They rewarded his hospitality by looting his cabin of a shotgun, ammunition and food the following day, they admitted to police.

The logger, Charles Sherman, said the girl came to him late Thursday and said she wanted to surrender to police because she was hungry and feared her friends had deserted her.

Police, called by Sherman, were led by the girl to a camp site where the trio had stayed for several nights. They obtained bloodhounds and found the boys nearby after a 30-minute search.

Investigators said they would introduce testimony, probably Monday when the hearing resumes, showing how the plane was certified by the CAA.

This line of questioning preceded another major conflict in testimony in the probe to discover what happened before the crash.

Tells of Watching Take-off

Bennett H. Griffin, director of National Airport, said he was watching from his office window when Bridoux took off in the P-38.

He testified that the Bolivian used Runway 36, the north-south strip at the airport.

Investigators promptly referred to previous testimony by Glenn Tigner, 21-year-old traffic controller who cleared the plane, that Bridoux took off from Runway 3, which crosses No. 36 from southwest to northeast at an angle of 30 degrees.

They also repeated testimony of Robert B. Union, another traffic controller in the tower at the time, that he heard Tigner instruct Bridoux to leave from Runway 3.

Harold A. Jones, the only CAB member serving on the investigating panel, then remarked:

"That's a good example of what happens in these accident cases. Here are two men who both think they are right in telling us different things.

"That might have caused a difference if he took off on No. 36 He might have thought he was to land on the same runway since he was only in the air about 15 minutes."

Bolivian Aide Recalled

Aubin and Ovidio Pozo, personal secretary to Guillermo Guttierez, Bolivian Ambassador to the Pan American Union, were recalled to the witness stand.

They both agreed that Bridoux used No. 3 runway on his takeoff, which they observed from the ground nearby.

Griffin's positive assertion he saw the flight begin on No. 36 bore out a statement by Bridoux in a deposition taken November 8 at Alexandria Hospital, where he is recuperating from critical injuries.

Bridoux flatly declared he took off to the north, and not to the northeast, although he said he could not remember the number of the runway.

This latest disagreement served to thrust the inquiry into a snarl even greater than it has been during a week of contradictory testimony.

A written statement by Aubin was read into the record over Jones's objection.

Jones said the question of "who owns the airplane is not the issue here."

Harold Kurtz, counsel for Aubin, protested that Major Pol had been permitted to testify earlier on ownership of the P-38 at the time of the crash.

Pol, air transport chief in the Bolivian Air Force, had said in a sworn statement previously that "the Bolivian government has consistently taken the position that the plane is still the property of Universal (Aubin's firm) and never became the property of the Bolivian government.

$1000 Put Down as Cash

The Bolivian government purchased the P-38 with a $1000-cash down payment and a promise to pay the $14,500 balance, Aubin said.

Before the plane was flown, both Bridoux and Major Pol signed a statement assuming "full responsibility for any and all damages that may be incurred," Albin added.

Major Pol represented the Bolivian Purchasing Commission in the transaction.

Questioned closely about procedures in landing at National Airport, one of the thorny problems of the investigation, was Clarence J. Stock, chief of the aircraft control branch of the Civil Aeronautics Administration's Region I at New York.

Tells of Confusion

CAB Attorney Russell A. Potter wanted to know how "deviations" from published traffic patterns over the field could be authorized.

They may be made by "request to the tower," Stock said.

Jones asked about the order from the tower to Bridoux to 'take a 360" turn to the left when the DC-4 and P-38 appeared to approach the runway together.

"It is logical to ask for a 360 to the left to permit the DC-4 to continue on in," Stock said. It indicates a wide, complete circle to the left.

Jones said such an order "confuses me, and it seems to me it might have confused" Bridoux. The pilot failed to comply with the order, tower operators have testified, and he did not obey a frantic last-minute call to "turn left."

Sergeant Is Thanked

The day's first witness was Sergt. Morris J. Flounlacker, a member of the crew of a crash boat based at Bolling Air Base across the Potomac from the point of collision.

Flounlacker told how he dived into the water to grab Bridoux.

Before leaving the witness chair, he was commended on behalf of the CAB "for your courageous act in saving the life of Mr. Rios" (Bridoux).

Bolivian representatives joined in thanking the sergeant.

Praise, Blame Mingled Over Transit Radio

Returns in The Washington Post's ballot on transit radio brought in several notes of criticism, and several notes of praise, for the fact that the balloting was undertaken.

One nonvoter said it would have been better to use signed ballots, and commented:

"In using an unsigned ballot, what is to prevent persons who may be interested in the money-making side of the transaction from buying any number of papers and submitting any number of ballots . . . This might be done on either side, for that matter, but is not nearly so likely on the 'no' side, as no money interest is involved."

A YES voter called the transit radio "a mark of progress" and added "I appreciate The Post giving me an opportunity to express my feelings."

Another YES voter took The Post sharply to task for its balloting. He wrote:

"I am inclosing my ballot in your poll on transit music, because I enjoy it when I ride. Having sold papers by this means, however, you owe it to your readers and also to those whose businesses are involved (competitors of yours notwithstanding) to admit the lack of validity of all such polls.

"I am sure you are aware that in such cases those in favor are not sufficiently involved emotionally to take the time and trouble to return ballots, while those who are excited (and those who are incited) against the thing are the ones with sufficient motivation to send in a ballot. The normal ratio of NO over YES when opinions are equally divided has ranged anywhere from 2-to-1 to 9-to-1; perhaps in this case 6-to-1.

"In this case, when the 90 percent or more favorable transit riding group is diluted by the less favorable nonriding group (infrequent riders) you are likely to obtain results of 15 percent YES and 85 percent NO. This will be as grossly misleading as any poll results ever printed here. Are you honest enough to admit this, even to the extent of one ambiguously worded sentence, in your Sunday edition? I hope so."

(Editor's note: In announcing the ballot in its issue of November 3, The Washington Post said it had no thought that the informal balloting "could produce a final and statistically accurate expression of public sentiment in the District area. Statisticians could point out flaws in the results to be obtained by unregulated balloting. The aim is simply to secure as wide an expression of public opinion as feasible.")

A NO voter also was critical, saying, "I do not think this poll will really show the correct opinion because the ones who want (transit radio) are organized and the others are not . . ."

Another NO voter said she had never been asked her opinion while riding the streetcars "so I welcome this."

A YES voter wrote "as one of thousands of Government employes favoring music in streetcars and buses (and loving it) but unable to express their opinions otherwise, I thank The Washington Post sincerely for this opportunity."

A NO voter said of "these polls"—"they prove nothing."

A YES voter wrote "your attempt to pre-judge a case before the District PUC is very obnoxious and intemperate. This vote is made under protest."

NO voter said "the action of The Post in making this ballot possible is greatly appreciated."

balloters out of the Washington Metropolitan area's estimated 1,400,000 population.

In the following comments, drawn from the thousands of returns, the members of the balloting group tell why they voted as they did:

YES — "It is wonderful"

NO — "It's horrible."

YES — "By all means"

NO—"Certainly not. Offensive and unconstitutional."

YES — "While I am casting my vote in the affirmative, I can take it or leave it alone. It is just another noise to which you soon become accustomed . . . To me the controlling factor is that the Transit Co. makes a little revenue which they probably need."

NO—"Why should the Capital Transit Co. be allowed to make money out of us by selling us to advertisers as an unwilling 'captive audience.'"

YES — "Except crime news. There is enough to worry about without having to listen to crime news reports."

NO—"Let them have earphones so people can tune in on the broadcasts if they want to."

YES—"But please keep the nice, soft soothing music that I have had the pleasure of hearing."

NO—"Most of it sounds like a circus with the barkers going full blast. It seems to me that dignity is vanishing from the world."

YES—"But keep the music soft and low as it is."

NO—"Don't want the tin-can music."

YES—"All the school kids like the music aand even let trolleys without music go by. Some of them turn on portable radios when there is no (transit) radio."

NO—"The music is only for the bobbysoxers.

YES—"To be sure my sons and I like music. I am now 80 y'rs old & never wish to get cranky. Let's have music."

NO—"Both members of this household—mature people of the old New England stock—wish to cast a vote. Such broadcasting appears to us immoral, illegal, unintelligent and in deplorable taste."

YES—"My husband and I try to memorize the different numbers of buses and streetcars to make sure we get one with music."

NO—"A 1000 times no! We are turning into a race of morons."

YES—"Maybe radio will wake up some of these deadheads; we'll vote for TV too."

NO—"It interferes with the spiritual thoughts and meditations and silent prayers and readings of the Bible and Bible textbooks of us ministers of the Gospel."

YES—"To those who are annoyed, here are some suggestions: Try to ascertain how many instruments are playing, and which ones—do you know all the composers. First thing you know you will have arrived at your destination unannoyed."

NO—"We are forced to listen to stuff that goes on and on and on. If it was a case of matrimony, we could go into any court and get a divorce on the grounds of mental cruelty."

YES—"This just cancels a guy's no vote that was sent in by a guy I know."

NO—"My limit of toleration of any radio is about half an hour. After that I am ready to jump out the window."

YES—"Anyone who doesn't like soft, lovely music should see a psychologist. I don't know of anything more soothing to jangled nerves."

NO—"Can't read, think, or talk with its blaring."

YES—"Because it lessens the daily incidence of other daily yackety-yack.

NO—"Have I a right to get up, in a car every few minutes and in a loud voice urge people to buy my goods?"

YES—"Sure, a little more jingle-jangle in this cock-eyed world won't make much difference."

NO—"I am sick of the noise on the transit system."

YES—"Anyone who objects to radio whether in a house or streetcars needs a good doctor."

NO—"Fairly continual radio is bad enough at home without having it in buses, too!"

YES—"The music takes one's mind off his troubles."

NO—"No matter how serene I may have been, the moment that radio noise strikes me when I enter a streetcar or bus, I am furiously angry."

YES—"Music puts sunshine in cloudy days."

NO—"I'm a victim of tone deafness and listening to a screeching, see-sawing sound over my head is nauseating."

YES—"Let those who can't stand the radio plug their ears."

NO—"It's a toe-hold for regimented thought control."

YES—"But I would prefer better service during rush hours. Soft music doesn't soothe me after waiting half an hour while several cars pass me up especially when it's raining."

NO—"Just more straps on buses to hand on to."

YES—"I would also like to have a seat when riding, as I stand all day."

NO—"If something could be done to improve the bus service between Bethesda and College Park it would be a big public service."

YES—"But only if commercial announcements are omitted and if the music is good—e. g. Brahms Lullaby, Driga's Serenade, etc.—of the light classical variety which can upset nobody's nerves."

NO—"The type of music and cheap advertising is an insult to my intelligence."

YES—"The music is fine. We could do with less commercials. They are boring."

NO—"It is the commercials that one really resents."

YES—"Provided soft music is played and advertising time is kept to a minimum."

NO—"I shall buy from no firm that advertises by car or bus radio."

YES—"Provided commercials are kept to a minimum. The present broadcasts are OK."

NO—"It's those blankety-blank commercials and idiotic time signals that gripe."

YES—"If the broadcasts will help defray company expenses and prevent a raise in fares, I am in favor of them."

NO—"If we are forced to listen to commercials we should be given free bus rides."

YES—"It is indeed a pleasure, as we have enough unhappiness in life, and music is good for everyone."

NO—"There is just no pleasure in reading my Washington Post on the streetcar with the radio going."

YES—"I find the music soothing, it rests me."

NO—"When more ways are found to make passengers uncomfortable, the CTC will have them."

YES—"Only the 'old fossils' say 'no'."

NO—"Oh, for the good old days . . ."

YES—"The music gives a definite lift to the spirits."

NO—"It is infuriating beyond measure . . ."

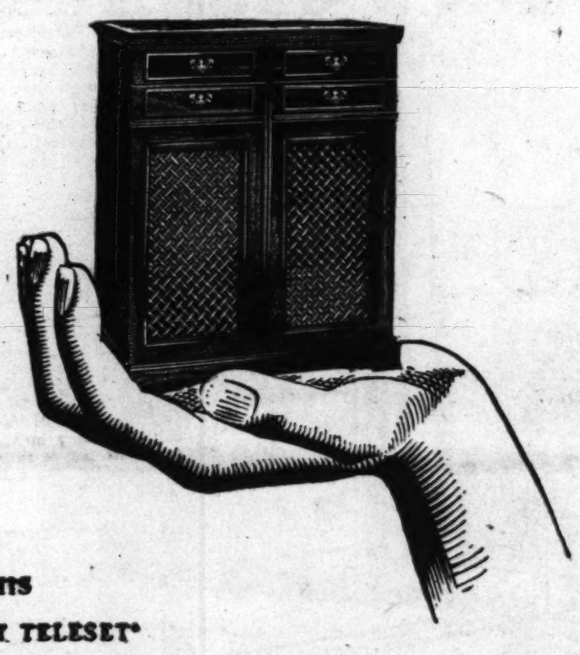
Democrats Make Timid Souls Out Of Socialists

Milwaukee, Nov. 12 (U.P.).—Socialist leaders admitted today that their party's future has been clouded by successes of the Democratic Party, and there was talk of dropping out of the next national election.

The Socialist executive committee met today and discussed proposals to restrict the party to educational activities. William Becker, labor and organization secretary, said the party's future probably would be decided at a general convention next spring.

If the Republicans had won in 1948, instead of the Democrats, the Socialists might have gained more labor support, Becker said. But that picture was changed when labor aligned with the Democrats, he said.

The executive committee held its strategy meeting with Norman Thomas, Maynard Krueger and Tucker P. Smith.



THIS
WAS MADE
SPECIALLY FOR YOU

Suppose we invited you to come over to the factory the day we built your set, so you could see for yourself that it was made exactly right.

You might start out by saying, "I expect to have this Du Mont receiver a good, long time; and I don't want to be bothered calling a service man any oftener than I can help. So before you start putting this set together, will you just give each little part a thorough test."

We don't argue. We don't tell you that all these hundreds of tubes, and resistors, and condensers, and switches, and sockets had been made and tested by the most reliable makers in the country.

No! We just test them all over for you. Prove to your complete satisfaction that each is 100% right.

And then your set—your own special chassis—starts down the assembly line.

You gasp a little as your eye travels down that almost endless row of heads, intently bowed over their work. These people seem very efficient, but since this is your special set, we'll have a supervisor check up on each of those operations.

As your completed chassis comes off the line and moves to the alignment test, you are fascinated by the elaborate battery of instruments that probe its innermost secrets. When they give the big OK, it seems that nothing could possibly be wrong with that set. But still you're not satisfied.

"Let's run it a few hours," you suggest, "if anything is going to show up, I'd rather it happened here than after I got it home."

"A fine idea," we agree, "most latent defects do show up in the first two hours of operation."

And, sure enough, the next alignment test shows one or two minor adjustments which need to be made.

"Just one more thing," you say. "All these tests I've watched were made in special factory test circuits. I know you do that for absolute uniformity; but before my set is packed, couldn't we hook it up to an outside aerial and make sure it works equally well on a regular broadcast?"

So we do just that—run it for two more hours on different channels, and you are absolutely delighted with its flawless performance. You take your "extra-special" set home, sure in your own mind that you have the most perfect television receiver ever made.

There's no use spoiling it for you by telling you that every Du Mont built goes through everything you suggested and a lot more you never thought of.

After all, how do you suppose Du Mont got its wonderful reputation for dependable performance?

Service Job Layoffs To Reach 123,000 by Dec. 1, Officials Say

This is the month of heavy layoffs in the Army, Navy, and Air Force.

By December 1, officials predict, 123,000 of the 135,000 civilian jobs ordered abolished in August by Defense Secretary Johnson will have been wiped out. The remaining 12,000 will be abolished before next June 30.

About 14,000 of these employes, however, are being transferred to the payroll of the new Military Assistance Program. In another six months it is estimated that 25,000 military civilians will be employed on it.

Morning-to-evening conferences have been held in the Pentagon for the past week on the 1950 military budget, which became law only a few weeks ago. Progress and plans for the remainder of this fiscal year are being mapped at those meetings, which are continuing.

For the 800,000 civilian employes in the services, the big question is this—will another general layoff be ordered?

Defense officials don't expect another general reduction at this time. On the other hand, they do look for layoffs for some activities where surveys ordered by Secretary Johnson indicate overstaffing. A dozen studies of various military activities are being made.

Pentagon employes are uneasy over reports the ax is about to fall there.

It's an open secret that Secretary Johnson once told his top staff that he wanted to knock out 5000 Pentagon jobs and the time-wasting procedures and red tape.

In addition, a private management firm is said to have recommended that a 10 percent personnel cut be made among Defense employes at headquarters here.

This word seeped back to operating officials and employes alike. Personnel "freezes" were slapped on many offices; few vacancies have been filled, and procedures are being revised.

"The progress being made by the agencies themselves," an official commented, "may prevent any big reduction in force. Secretary Johnson is gradually gaining his objective because the operating people are now convinced that he means business. Drastic action may not be necessary in this case."

Some discussions have been held, it is reported, on the possibility of transferring several hundred civilian jobs here to field offices outside this city.

Despite terrific pressure, Secretary Johnson has stuck to his guns on the huge layoff program. He has approved few cancellations and extentions to his original order.

The Norfolk and Brooklyn Naval Shipyards, for example, were allowed to retain about 800 men who were slated for dismissal, but larger reductions to offset this increase were ordered for Navy's West Coast yards. The Long Beach, Calif., naval establishment won't be closed down completely until late next spring.

AWAPD: The first Federal worker to benefit from the new liberalized employes' compensation act is a 77-year-old former crapenter at the Columbus, Ohio, Army depot. The carpenter was blinded in the right eye by a flying nail. His name was not disclosed.

Federal Security Administrator Oscar R. Ewing said the carpenter's compensation check will be doubled for the next 160 weeks as a result of the new law. In addition, Ewing said, the man will remain on the compensation roll as long as he has a loss of earning power due to the injury.

Additional cash benefits to injured Federal employes under the law will be about nine million dollars annually. Ewing said the most significant new provision is one changing the maximum compensation from $116.66 to $525 a month. The basic rate now applies to salaries up to $9450 a year as against the old maximum of $2100 annually.

Roosevelt Envoy Alleges Loss Of Liberty in New, Fair Deals

Ev Cinc Jones—The Washington Post

Archbishop O'Boyle holds medal presented to Dr. Hayes

Traditional friends as well as acknowledged foes have contributed to the "startling setback of liberty" in our generation, Dr. Carlton J. H. Hayes, former Ambassador to Spain under President Roosevelt, said last night.

The Columbia University historian said several factors have contributed to this.

One, he said, is the "tendency to subordinate individual liberty to majority rule." Another is "the enormous development of capitalistic enterprise in our times, accompanied by the ever-increasing absorption in material concerns, and by the 'welfare state' with its rapidly expanding functions."

Hayes warned of "the undermining of human liberties" after receiving the Cardinal Gibbons Medal from the Alumni Association of Catholic University.

The medal was the first annual award of the group. It was presented by the Most Rev. Patrick A. O'Boyle, Archbishop of Washington, and chancellor of the university, before some 600 alumni gathered at the Mayflower Hotel. The event was the climax of the university's three-day Homecoming.

Hayes, a former Baptist now a Catholic, received the medal as a "distinguished teacher, historian, and publicist . . . who has labored devotedly by word and pen to serve the cause of truth."

Hayes, who viewed the "new deals" and "fair deals" as a trend toward state-socialism, also had a word about Federal aid to education. He charged that "novel interpretations" have "perverted" the role of separation of church and state.

He attacked Russian Premier Josef Stalin as a "half-oriental and half-barbarian" who continues to crush liberty, and as one no less menacing to the ideal of human freedom than were Hitler and Mussolini.

Citing his experiences as ambassador to Spain, Hayes said that Catholic Spaniards were chiefly responsible for the fact that Spain did not become a "puppet of the Communist dictator at Moscow." He regretted the "military dictatorship" in Spain "but we should recognize that it is no such tyranny as prevails in eastern Europe and that it is transitional."

Michael Luddy, class of 1916, president of the Los Angeles alumni, acted as toastmaster.

Other speakers included the Right Rev. Msgr. Patrick J. McCormick, rector of the university, who reported on the status of the university.

"The university has launched upon what appears to be another successful year," he said. "The record-breaking enrollment of last year has been almost reached again this year . . . The total enrollment, 4646 . . . indicates a decrease of 13 students. This is considered a very slight decrease in view of the reported 15 percent decline in most universities and colleges."

As a final word, the president pointed out that today is the 60th birthday of the university.

2 Held in $1000, 2 Are Juveniles; Coins Comprise Bulk of Loot

Four youths, two of them juveniles, were charged with housebreaking yesterday as result of theft of $979.80, almost all of it in nickels and dimes.

The theft occurred, officers said, between 1 a. m., and noon, Friday, at the office of the Allied Beverage Co., in the rear of 230 11th st. se. The company operates automatic beverage dispensing machines.

The loot included a gallon can half full of nickels, another gallon can half full of dimes, and a sack, also filled with change and a few bills.

Precinct Detectives Bernard Panetta and Ralph Shoemaker and Pvts. George Maghan and Thomas Quinn of the fifth precinct went to work in the case.

They picked up a 15-year-old errand boy employed in the beverage company, and after questioning him for some time, arrested Joseph E. Campbell, 18, of 1204 Walters pl. se. He was questioned for several hours, after which the officers arrested Bernard J. Stevenson, 20, of 1215 C st. se., and then a 17-year-old boy.

Campbell and Stevenson were held yesterday in Municipal Court for grand jury action, under $1000 bond each, and the youths turned over to juvenile authorities.

The officers said that the loot had been moved several times, and finally was divided four ways, at Stevenson's home. After digging in a yard, prowling basements, attics, and the rooms of the four defendants, officers finally recovered $500 of it, they said. The rest, police said, is still missing.

Thugs Invade Home, Seizing Over $425

Two gunmen invaded the home of Jesse M. Davis, 61, a retired fireman, yesterday afternoon and robbed him of more than $425.

Davis

Davis lives at 225 15th st. se.

He told police he was changing trousers in the basement after working in the back yard. He said he left his wallet on a bench in the basement when he went up to answer the doorbell.

He said the men forced him into his living room and asked "Where is the money?"

"What money?" Davis asked. Then they began a search.

Davis told police the men found his wife's purse and took from it a wallet containing $2. Then one went to the basement, found his wallet containing $425, and both men left through the front door.

Davis described both gunmen as white and well dressed. He said that the one who held the gun was 5 feet, 8 inches tall, weighed about 145 pounds, and wore a felt hat. The other was of a generally similar description.

Fine Feathers, Fine Show

AT NATIONAL CAPITAL BIRD SHOW, where canaries dominated the entry lists, this shaft tail finch was awarded best in wild bird class. It originally came from Australia and is owned by Mrs. Margaret Hines of 4905 Edmonston ave., Hyattsville, Md.

By Henry Mohlang—The Washington Post

THIS PARAKEET, also owned by Mrs. Hines, is one of the "odd" birds taking prizes. "Rudy" is full of tricks, but his favorite stunt is climbing the ladder and picking sticks from a box. The show is now open at Odd Fellows' Hall, 419 7th st. nw. Entered are nearly a score of varieties of birds. Along with a special show of the Metropolitan African Violet Club, the bird show is open to the public until 10 o'clock tonight

Warm Spell Scattered by Cold Front

The beautiful Indian summer weather which broke records Friday and prompted the Weather Bureau to a lyrical telegram, went with a northeast wind yesterday. High for the day was only 64, at 12:55 p. m.

Forecast for today is "cloudy and cooler, with a light drizzle in the early morning and a chance of showers by night." The forecaster said that the temperature will probably reach a low of 48 early today and that the high will be around 55. Also, more of the same is probable on Monday.

The Weather Bureau said that a cold air mass has moved in "by the back door." Forecasters said that by this they mean it came directly south from Canada instead of by the usual route from the northwest. It was borne here, they said, on northeast winds. After its effect is felt for a day or two, they said, some slightly warmer weather is likely, though they would make no guarantees.

Saddle Saga

Stable Man Held After 'Horseplay'

Metropolitan Police no longer have any men mounted on horses. But they acquired a temporary mounted force of one man, last week, and in plainclothes at that.

As a result, John Elwood Russell, 33, of 1448 Rock Creek Ford rd. nw., a stable hand, was arrested yesterday and charged with operating a lottery and possession of lottery slips. He was held under $1500 bond for a hearing Monday before United States Commissioner C. S. Lawrence.

Sixth Precinct police said they received a complaint about Russell two weeks ago. Attempting to contact him, they had an undercoverman go to the Russell Riding School, 1428 Rock Creek Ford rd. nw., where Russell was employed, and go riding. He did that twice before he gained Russell's confidence and was able to place a bet, officers said.

Then they obtained a warrant for him. Yesterday, after making another play, they said, they arrested him and found marked money and slips in his possession.

Police Seeking Bookkeeper, $1100 Payroll

Prince Georges County police were searching yesterday for an $1100 payroll, discovered missing from a Hall, Md., lumber firm, and also for a bookkeeper who allegedly disappeared at the same time.

Detective Vincent Free said the firm is the S & F Lumber Co., Crain Highway, near Central ave.

W. D. Normandy, office manager, reported the payroll was drawn from a bank Thursday because Friday was a bank holiday. He put it in the company's safe in the office and locked the safe about 7 p. m. Thursday, he said. It was gone 12 hours later.

Sought for questioning was a bookkeeper, Normandy said, who was hired about six weeks ago. He was last seen, Normandy said, in the office about 8:30 p. m. Thursday. Detective Free and Lieut E. A. Turner are investigating the case.

After Game

Physicist Convicted As Drunk

A research physicist at Howard University was charged with being drunk and disorderly and with assaulting a policeman at the Capital Classic football game at Griffith Stadium Friday night.

He is Harvey Banks, 26, of 139 Florida ave. nw., who pleaded not guilty to the assault charge in Municipal Court yesterday and was granted a jury trial on December 22. His bond was continued at $500.

Banks pleaded guilty to the drunk and disorderly charges and drew a $10 suspended fine on the former and a $5 fine on the latter.

Police said Banks, who works on a Navy atomic research project at the university, started an argument with Jesse E. Porter, 19, of 1246 Half st. sw., while they were watching the game between West Virginia State and North Carolina College from the upper west stand in the stadium.

When Pvt. Albert Palls, of the Second Precinct, interceded, Banks tried to choke him by yoking" him, police reported. Palls said that when he started to lose consciousness, Pvt. Clifton I. Panciera, of the Thirteenth Precinct, came to his aid and struck Banks once over the head with his baton.

Palls was treated at Freedmen's Hospital for an injured right hand and bruises and was ordered on sick leave. Banks was treated at Gallinger Hospital for a head cut.

Police said they had to call extra men to handle a crowd of 3000 persons at the doors of Uline Arena, where a dance was held after the game. Several scout cars and motorcycle men were dispatched. No arrests were made.

Chapman Due To Support Play Area Suit

Newly appointed Interior Secretary Oscar Chapman's opposition to segregation in Washington play areas will be made clear in a legal paper expected to be filed Monday in District Court.

Though nominally filed by the Justice Department, the paper, an answer to the suit by five Negro mothers against segregation at the Trinidad playground, is known to have Chapman's "complete approval."

The answer is expected to make it clear the department, and in fact the Federal Government, is on the side of the mothers in their suit, although Interior has legally been named a defendant.

The other defendants in the court action—the District Commissioners, the Recreation Board and the Board of Education—are expected to oppose the suit, which asks an end to segregation.

The Government answer, prepared by Interior and Justice attorneys, is due to be filed Monday, barring a last-minute tieup.

Chapman's friends make it clear the new secretary, who has served in the department since 1933, "will make no compromise with the Federal position" on segregation. Chapman's predecessor, J. A. Krug, opposed segregation in play areas. The Government has intervened in a Supreme Court segregation case to ask the end of the "separate but equal" facilities of such segregation.

Chapman was reported as having a detailed knowledge of the local play situation with its long history of argument between Interior and the Recreation Board over segregated playgrounds and swimming pools. He took part in some of the negotiations during the past several months.

District Land Termed Trap For Motorists

An irate motorist yesterday described the District-owned land adjoining the Sears, Roebuck & Co. parking lot on Maryland ave. ne., as "a trap for motorists."

The description came from George J. Kane, 5513 Parkland ct. se., who appeared in Municipal Court after he received a traffic ticket for parking on public space. He was released on personal bond and refunded the $3 collateral he had posted.

Kane said he had no way of knowing that the land was public space, since it appeared to be part of the lot and was not posted with "no parking" signs.

District officials said they have received numerous complaints from motorists ticketed for parking there, but added that public space is never posted in the District.

The United States Attorney's office did not issue any papers in the case after Macaboy's family explained that he was in bad health and would receive hospital treatment if released.

Freeholders to Vote On Big Falls Church School Building Loan

Arlington Tyro

Poll Victor Gives Credit To Others

Politicking is a new experience for Robert W. Cox, Arlington's newly elected nonpartisan County Board member.

The 34-year-old Federal Communications Commission budget officer has never held public office before.

Election of Cox, unassuming Town Meeting candidate, may be a milestone in Arlington history. When he takes office next January, control of the five-man County Board will shift from current Democratic control to a nonpartisan majority, made up of Cox, Mrs. Florence Cannon and Daniel Dugan.

Cox frankly admits his surprise at the 1000-vote margin by which he defeated Democratic incumbent Basil M. DeLashmutt on November 8.

Credits Organization

"I'm relatively unknown in the county," says Cox. He assigns credit for his victory to "the best organization of interested citizens Arlington ever saw, with the exception of the school campaign."

His fellow nonpartisans on the board, have made much of his budget experience, in stressing his usefullness to the board.

As FCC budget officer, Cox was responsible last year for preparing the commission's $6,600,000 budget—"almost the same size as the county budget," he points out.

But Cox himself thinks the principal thing he'll bring to the board is "a desire to bring the citizens into closer relationship with the County Government."

Plans Simplified Summary

County residents should get more information on their government's plans and activities, Cox believes.

For example, he plans to work out a simplified summary and explanation of the county's next budget for public consumption. The actual budget, prepared by the county manager according to State law, is so technical it's "impossible" for a layman to understand, Cox claims.

What's more, Cox believes voters should take an active part in forming county plans through advisory committees to be set up by the board.

"We've got people here in the county who have headed State tax departments—plain downright experts." He wants the county to make much wider use of these "experts" who live within its borders.

Would Add PUC Expert

Other projects Cox had advocated, and intends to work for, are:

Employment of a full-time rate expert for the county's Public Utilities Commission.

Establishment of a tax equalization board to reccommend redistribution of the county tax burden.

Quicker completion of the master zoning plan, now in the conference stage.

An emergency temporary sidewalk program, particularly for areas where school children face traffic dangers.

Cox, who is a Warren County, Va. native, holds a B. A. in political science and M. S. in public administration from Syracuse University.

Married Syracuse Co-ed

Also acquired at Syracuse is his pretty wife, the former Ruth O'Dell, who got her own B. A. in speech there. They have three children, Susan, 7, Bobby, 5, and Kevin, 15 months.

The Coxes became permanent Arlington residents in 1940, when he was appointed a junior budget examiner in the Bureau of the Budget. Eight years, and numerous grades later, Cox left the Budget Bureau to take his present job as budget officer for the Federal Communications Commission.

Cox, who is 5' 9" and weighs 165 pounds, picks bowling as his favorite recreation, but gets in an occasional game of golf.

Extra time weekends is used for his own "home improvement program," months behind due to campaigning, Cox explains sadly:

"I've got to paint that fence, there's a leak in the roof up there someplace, and that gutter needs fixing," he says, eyeing his bungalow at 2518 S. 2d st.

$500,000 Proposed For New Buildings; Referendum Next

By Judy Spivak

Post Reporter

Falls Church property owners will decide next Saturday whether they want the School Board's "urgently needed" construction program enough to boost their tax bill about 25 cents per $100 of assessed value.

If the "freeholders" approve the $700,000 loan at the Saturday referendum, the School Board will probably ask the State Literary Loan Fund for $500,000. With this money, it will begin the following program to expand the city's present one-school system:

1. A 500-pupil junior-senior high school, for seventh through twelfth grade students.

2. A 120-pupil primary school for children in the early grades "farthest from existing facilities."

3. Remodeling of the city's present Madison School Building. The board hopes to abandon use of the old Jefferson Annex to Madison.

$200,000 From Bond Issue

Money from the literary fund can be used only for new school construction, so the school board estimates a $200,000 bond issue will be necessary to complete the expansion program.

Such a loan would need referendum approval from all qualified voters, even if the property owners approve the over-all program Saturday.

Interest on the literary fund loan plus repayment of principal would be about $37,500 annually, the School Board estimates. Half of this amount can be paid out of school taxes at the present rate, thus necessitating only a 25-cent increase, the board said.

Opponents of the school construction plans have questioned the need for a second high school in the Falls Church area. The present Falls Church High School, located within city limits but operated by Fairfax, takes city students on a tuition basis.

Present High School Crowded

The School Board, however, claims the 1000-pupil building is "loaded beyond capacity," with "several hundred" more students expected next year. The board contends an addition cannot be built to the present school because of a site inadequacy.

If the city has its own high school, the School Board says, it can shift seventh grade students from the Madison Elementary School to the high school building.

More important, the board says it will be in a position to deal with overcrowding caused at present by the "great number of Fairfax County children" in the Madison School.

Exchange System Might Stay

Although the School Board intends to give priority to Falls Church students in its proposed new schools, some exchange arrangement with Fairfax will probably be continued.

City proposals to annex an undetermined area in adjacent Fairfax have "complicated" school planning, the board admits. However, even if the city should acquire the county-run Falls Church High School, and Oak Street Elementary Schools, as a result of annexation, they would "fit into a city-wide school system serving the larger number of pupils who would then be within the city."

The school officials will hold a school bond rally at 8 p. m. Monday in the Madison School, to explain details of the proposed school-construction loan.

Blast Catches Truck Drivers Napping Here

Fifteen truck drivers, getting in their best sleep at 5 a. m. yesterday, suddenly jumped out of their beds as one man at Newbill's Truckers' Rest at 1943 New York ave. ne. They were in a second-floor bunkroom.

Reason was, firemen said, that downstairs a collection of illuminating gas, apparently from a defective pipe, exploded when Raymond M. Sewell, night cashier, struck a match to light a cigarette. The blast blew out windows, but did not set the place afire.

Sewell was treated for burns about the hands and neck and then taken to Casualty Hospital, where he was reported in good condition, but minus his eyebrows and considerable hair.

Police Probing Holdup Report

Alexandria police were investigating a Miami salesman's report that he was held up early yesterday in his automobile and $625 was stolen from him.

The salesman, Lewis Brooks, told police that about 1:30 a. m. he was crouched in his car, in the 500 block of S. Washington st., attempting to replace a light fuse. Suddenly, he told police someone said "This is a stickup; don't move." His wallet, he said, then was taken. When he got to his feet no one was in view.

Cardiac Clinic Gift Of Club Dedicated

Emergency Hospital now has a modern, fully equipped cardiac clinic for charity patients, thanks to the Variety Club of Washington, Tent No. 11.

The clinic, containing about $4000 worth of equipment, was dedicated at brief hospital ceremonies attended by club members and emergency officials.

Funds for the clinic, and a similar one at Children's Hospital, were pledged by the club during the recent Washington Heart Association drive.

Expressing appreciation, Samuel H. Kauffman, president of Emergency Hospital, said: "Our object here is better service for more patients at a lower cost to them. This cannot be done now. We do not have the funds to purchase this extra equipment which you have so kindly given us. You are doing something which we could not possibly do for ourselves."

Dr. John A. Reisinger, chief of the cardiac clinic, said the donation would permit both "more thorough, complete" examinations and centralization of the hospital's cardiac work.

Presentation on behalf of the Variety Club was made by Jake Flax, chief barker of the club.

The new equipment included a fluoroscope, a plethysmograph for studying vascular diseases, an oximeter for measuring oxygen in the bloodstream, a centrifuge for routine blood volume studies, and equipment for testing the amount of air breathed.

A part-time physician has been named a fellow in cardiology to work in the new clinic, officials said yesterday.

Others attending the dedication were: James G. Capossela, hospital administrator; Fred S. Kogod, chairman of the Variety Club's welfare committee; George A. Crouch and J. S. Burke, also on the club's welfare committee, and Dr. Edward Cafritz, a staff surgeon at Emergency.

CID Men Hold Convention in Federal Room

The Statler Hotel was a tough spot for a footpad, or any other underworld character last night.

Gathered in the Federal room were more than 100 Army detectives, past and present operatives of the famed Criminal Investigation Division.

Just for good measure, Inspector Floyd A. Truscott, assistant superintendent of the Metropolitan Police; Inspector Mark Raspberry, chief of the Park Police, and Maj. Gen. E. P. Parker, Army Provost Marshal General, were along as guests.

Nothing sinister, just the third annual convention of the Criminal Division Agents Association, described by a member as a "social" organization where old CID men could keep in touch.

In the afternoon, they elected Charles Shapiro, a Rego Park, Long Island, real estate man and former chief of the Paris detachment of the CID, as president to succeed Michael E. Scanlon of New York. In the evening they ate, drank and were merry.

No arrests.

Evans Explains U. N. Work on Causes of War

Dr. Luther H. Evans, Librarian of Congress, explained the ways in which the United Nations organization is "attacking underlying problems which cause the maladjustments . . . that lead to war" as well as attacking its "overt phases" in a talk yesterday at a luncheon meeting of the Huguenot Society of Washington at the Kennedy-Warren Hotel.

Dr. Evans, who was a delegate to the fourth conference of UNESCO in Paris this fall, spoke primarily about the work of this educational, scientific and cultural branch of the U. N.

"All of us are the prisoners of things we were taught in school that aren't true," he said in discussing UNESCO's work in the improvement of textbooks. He cited the instance of an American geography book that described Costa Rica as "that small backward country which assassinates its presidents." Actually, the United States has assassinated more of its Presidents than Costa Rica has, Dr. Evans pointed out.

A study of "the tensions which cause ill will between countries" is also under way, the speaker said. Each country will write a report on itself and how it feels about other countries. By comparing the attitudes of the various countries toward one another, it is expected that some of the difficulties can be found, he explained.

Touching briefly on the phases of UNESCO's work, Dr. Evans included the reconstruction of educational facilities in war-ravaged countries, education seminars, fostering contact between scientists and spreading scientific information to the east, the translation of the great literature of all counries, the clarification of the meaning of terms—such as democracy—to facilitate universal understanding of them and the promotion of communication.

UNESCO is also promoting the exchange of books between countries, the need for which is clearly seen in the case of the Library of Congress' recent difficult search for Russian books that the Air Force required for its planning, Dr. Evans pointed out.

The librarian was introduced by Canon George J. Cleaveland of the Washington Cathedral. Mrs. Absalom Waller, president of the society, presided over a program that included songs by A. Harlen Castle.

Among the guests were the Rev. Dr. Lucien Reimbault of France, the Rev. J. Jaquelin Ambler and the Rev. Dr. C. Leslie Glenn.

Funeral services will be held at 2 p. m. Tuesday at the Capitol Heights Baptist Church. Burial will be in the Congressional Cemetery.

In Memoriam

HUGHES, PHILLIP. In loving memory of our stepfather, PHILLIP HUGHES, who departed this life one year ago today, November 13, 1948.

His life is a beautiful memory,
His absence a silent grief;
He sleeps in God's beautiful garden
In the sunshine of perfect peace.

Loving stepdaughter,
ESTELLE HOWARD.

If I had seen you at the last
And held your dying hand,
And saw the last sigh from your lips
I would not feel so bad.

Lonely stepdaughter,
MRS. MAMIE TYLER.

Helpmates Of Freedom

President Truman's address to the National Conference of Christians and Jews was essentially an appeal to the conscience of the people. While he referred incidentally to his legislative program on civil rights, his emphasis was upon what is in the hearts of the people. For the President is well aware of the fact that in a free country laws are meaningful only to the degree that they reflect the will of the people. That is particularly true, of course, in the field of human relations.

The National Conference of Christians and Jews has done effective work in overcoming prejudices, eliminating discriminations and promoting active cooperation among many religious groups for the common good. We suspect that its success is due largely to the fact that it does not attempt to harmonize beliefs or to hide religious or traditional differences, but, as the President pointed out, holds to a concept that rises above all differences—the concept of the brotherhood of man. Under a condition of freedom, unity and strength can be found only in this higher bond that respects the rights and dignity of the individual without regard for his origin or color, the faith he professes or the politics to which he adheres.

The fact of the matter is that free people can govern themselves successfully only if a very large measure of this tolerance and brotherhood exists. Freedom itself is a negative concept. It merely creates the opportunity for men and women to follow their various pursuits of happiness without unnecessary molestation by a tyrannical state. But in our complicated modern society it would quickly lead to intolerable abuses if it were not leavened by toleranoe and brotherhood. We should never forget that these are not qualities that can be created by law, even though sound and well-devised laws may protect individuals against intolerance and discrimination in some instances.

The fact that tolerance and brotherhood are difficult to attain in a world that is beset by a "new barbarism" is no excuse for relaxation of our efforts. "There can be no higher challenge," as Mr. Truman said, "than to build a world of freedom and justice, a world in which all men are brothers. That is the goal toward which we must strive with all our strength"—even though its complete attainment may be impossible.

Britain's Peanuts

The British scheme for growing peanuts in East Africa, started in 1946, had cost the Government 23.2 million pounds up to March 31 of last year. Originally the plan called for the clearing of 150,000 acres during the first year and an additional 450,000 acres in the following year, with estimated yields of 56,000 tons of peanuts in the first year and 227,000 tons in the second year. Inadequate transport facilities, unserviceable tractors, and difficult terrain are given as some of the reasons why only 50,000 acres had been cleared and planted at the time the report was made. Incidentally, clearance costs per acre in one section were 10 times the amount of preliminary estimates and the total crop yield was just 2150 tons of shelled peanuts and 800 tons of sunflower seed. This spectacular crop failure is attributed to bad weather conditions, but the recent decision to grow sunflowers instead of peanuts as the first crop on cleared land suggests that the weather was not entirely to blame for the loss of the peanut crop.

The London Daily Telegraph calls this inauspicious adventure in colonial development one of the "worst jokes in the world," noting that every estimate of cost has proved to be wildly false. In fact, nobody knows what the costs actually are, since the accounting system is in a state of confusion. This sorry record has already been seized upon by critics of the President's Point 4 program to emphasize the danger of using Government money to finance developmental projects in backward areas. It is, however, rather a warning against undertaking such projects without the most careful study of all aspects of the program with the aid of expert advice.

When the taxpayers of a country are called upon to cover losses of an overseas enterprise, whether it is Government-controlled or subsidized by the Government, there is always a danger that overambitious projects will be undertaken and a temptation afforded for wasteful expenditure. For that reason it is essential to scrutinize all proposals for colonial and overseas development; and in our case at least restrict governmental aid to a limited field, avoiding guarantees to private investors against loss of profits and withholding subsidies that would encourage reckless adventures in risk-taking.

Search For A Program

The Democratic victories in New York and elsewhere have been hailed by President Truman and his supporters as evidence that their party is the party of the people dedicated to the welfare and prosperity of the United States and the world at large. While the election returns afford no basis for such extravagant claims, they do indicate that the tide is still running against the Republicans and emphasize the need of that party for a positive opposition program that will attract popular support.

The question confronting the Republican Party is how to increase its voting strength and win elections without sacrificing principles to political expediency. The first thing that needs to be done, we think, is to convince the people that the Republicans are just as concerned as the Democrats about their welfare and are not a reactionary group intent on preserving the privileges of intrenched interests. They should put less emphasis on negative criticism of Administration policies and turn to aggressive advocacy of substitute proposals. Many Republican leaders have committed the egregious blunder of warning the people of the dangers of the so-called welfare state without making it clear that their criticism of social legislation sponsored by Democrats is directed against particular forms of Government aid which, in their opinion, do not promote the general welfare.

It is these blundering tactics that have given their opponents an opportunity to denounce the Republicans as foes of the common man. They have shown poor judgment, too, by inveighing against Government regulation of economic activity in general terms, failing to define the limits between remedial regulation and regulation that tends to undermine the system of free enterprise. They have also denounced excessive spending for welfare purposes without qualifying reservations, thereby creating the impression that they are more concerned to lighten the burdens of taxpayers than to help the needy.

Senator Taft is an outstanding example of a Republican leader who has acquired an undeserved reputation for reactionism because he is prone to emphasize the defects of opposition policies. In an article recently published in Collier's, Mr. Taft made it plain that he is not opposed to Government regulation as such, but only to those forms of governmental control that in his opinion stifle free enterprise. Moreover, his demands for retrenchment in Government outlays are based on his belief that the tax burden has become so heavy as to constitute a threat to private enterprise—a "progressive force for a socialization" that would be imposed on the people without their consent. He protests that he favors reasonable expansion of activities in the field of health, education and welfare, and his record as sponsor of public housing legislation is proof of the sincerity of his professions.

This emphasis on the necessity of judging the effects of policies on democratic institutions and avoiding commitments that threaten to destroy freedom provides the basis for a party program that is likely to have increasing voter-appeal. For the preservation of the economic system under which we now live is of immense concern to most Americans. Moreover, as Senator Lodge points out, the Republican Party is by tradition and from conviction in a position to take a really dynamic stand on the civil rights program, whereas the Democrats are hopelessly divided on this issue. That is, in fact, one of the weakest spots in their armor, and the Republicans have done precious little so far to press their advantage in this field.

To be sure, both parties harbor members who are genuine reactionaries—men and women who cherish the institutions of a dead past—and are unwilling to face the problems of the present and the needs of the future. There are also schisms in the ranks of both parties, members who are out of sympathy with party aims but cling to party labels either for the sake of material gains or because they do not take the trouble to form independent judgments. However, the Republican Party is no more handicapped by this lack of homogeneity than are the Democrats. Both parties have to rely on aggressive leadership to hold and attract alert citizens whose allegiance is determined by the party's record of accomplishment, not by mere labels.

The Republicans are badly handicapped by an organizational setup that discourages the influx of new progressive elements. Reforms in this field are greatly needed to attract those liberals who are critical of the policies of the Democratic Party but have been denied the opportunity to participate in making the Republican Party a more effective exponent of opposition views. However, no organizational change will vitalize the GOP unless it has a positive program to present to the electorate. If the New York senatorial contest proved anything, it is that the Republicans cannot hope to win elections by name-calling and slogans that muddy debate and avoid real issues.

In this sort of contest their opponents have all the advantages, having grabbed for themselves the alluring slogans of "Fair Deal," "Welfare State," the "People's Party," etc. Nor will vague attacks directed against the evils of so-called statism induce voters to repudiate candidates who promise them more of the good things of life. They have to be convinced that the other fellow has as much or more to offer. That can only be done by aggressive advancement of new programs that the opposition really believes will make a sounder contribution to the welfare of all the people.

Peace Overture?

Late last year the quarterly Foreign Affairs published an analysis of Stalin's political aims, and particularly of his attitude on the question whether it was possible for communist and capitalist societies to coexist. The article was signed Historicus, and the conclusion drawn by the author from an extensive study of Stalin's ideological writings was that with all his shifts in policy he has never abandoned his belief in world revolution.

After nearly a year an angry retort to Historicus has appeared in the Russian political journal called the New Times. The article is signed by one Comrade Leonidov, but it could hardly have been published without Stalin's approval, and there is every reason to suppose that it was published at his instigation. After the usual denunciation of the author of the Historicus article as a "pen gangster," "slanderer" and "warmonger," Comrade Leonidov went on to say that Stalin's true position on the possibility of peace between the Communist and non-Communist worlds was contained in his statements to the Messrs. Howard and Stassen and others of a similar nature.

The question, as we see it, is not whether Historicus or Comrade Leonidov has correctly interpreted the mind of Stalin, but whether the article in the New Times represents a new tactical maneuver by the Kremlin. To put it plainly: is the publication of this article to be considered as an overture toward a truce between the Soviet and the United States? Does it mean that the Kremlin has changed its mind about the imminence of economic crisis in the United States and has accordingly moved the world revolution further back on its schedules? Doubtless these questions will presently be clarified and perhaps answered.

At the time of its appearance the Historicus paper seemed to us of so much importance that on December 20, 1948, we devoted to it a long editorial on this page. The conclusion we drew at that time still seems to us appropriate.

> We may deduce that an "understanding" with Stalin will be possible only if the developments of the class war suggest to him that a temporary truce is in the interest of his ultimate purpose. To say this does not mean that we should not accept a truce, when and if one is offered. But, if we allow ourselves to be deceived about Stalin's ultimate purpose, if we mistake an armistice for a peace, we shall be repeating the blunders of Tehran, Yalta and Potsdam, and contributing to the destruction that is being planned for us.

Restraint Repealed

When the Atomic Energy Commission was under fire from Senator Hickenlooper, Congress adopted a restriction upon its authority to spend money for new construction. This restriction took the form of a legislative rider to the Independent Offices Appropriation Act and was occasioned by disclosure that some of the AEC building projects had cost a great deal more than had been anticipated in preliminary estimates. The apparently excessive expenditures were justified by the majority report of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, however, on the ground of urgency. The effect of forbidding the AEC to rush into the construction of new and vitally needed facilities before precise cost figures could be obtained and approved would inevitably be to slow down its operations appreciably. Congress was wise in its second thought, therefore, to rescind the restriction.

The Senate rescinded the restriction by unanimous consent and the House then followed its lead. What was perhaps most notable in the Senate action was that Senator McMahon who introduced the repeal bill was warmly supported by Senator Millikin, who has been a vocal critic of AEC fiscal practices, and by Senator Hickenlooper himself. Both these gentlemen deserve credit for acknowledging the need to leave the AEC unfettered. Senator Hickenlooper said of the repeal proposal, "I think it is vital that this bill be passed," and Senator Millikin pointed out that "the Commission is confronted with the task of carrying on vitally important tasks in somewhat unknown and experimental areas and with speed which does not permit of the type of detailed advance planning associated with normal construction work." Now that the atomic bomb is in Russian hands, speed must be more than ever the keynote of the AEC's operations.

OVERHEAD

Lace-spun, the light clouds run,
Convoluted, airy, towered,
Silent-booming blue behind;
Swallows, lean and gently powered,
Swing and swerve the tunneled air—
High, so high the mind goes blind—
Gasps the summer heart with longing—
Moulded-blowing, austere, flowing,
Nothing swings so swift and fair
As the tall, wind-running mist
Stretching pointed sails to seat.
Were I told that time was shutting
Down all windows, darkness coming,
I would keep such clouds as these Longest in the mind foredoomed—
Images of smallows running
Channels of enormous bloom.

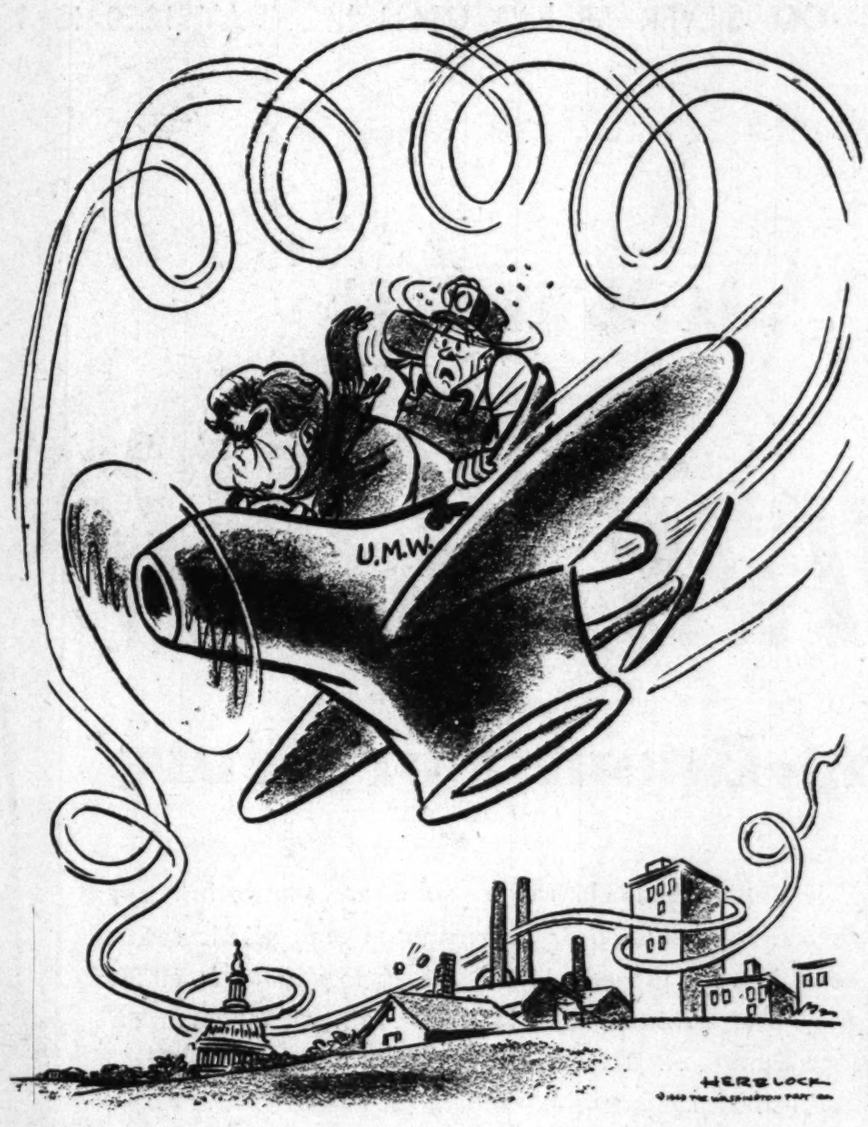
"Mighty Fancy, Boss — Where Are We Going?"



Acheson's Hard Task

By Andre Visson

Improvised Conferences

IMPROVISED international conferences, unlike improvised talks, are rarely successful. One can therefore understand the reluctance with which Secretary of State Acheson accepted Foreign Secretary Bevin's unexpected invitation to come to Paris for British-French-American discussions on Germany. The French diplomats were as reluctant as Secretary Acheson to attend an unprepared conference. But Mr. Bevin's view prevailed and the Paris conference took place. There it was decided that it should be followed immediately by a conference between Secretary Acheson and the West German Chancellor, Dr. Konrad Adenauer, at Bonn.

The establishment of the Soviet puppet state in Eastern Germany urgently calls for an adjustment of Allied policies in Germany. Unless the Western powers move to consolidate both their own positions in Germany and that of the Allied-sponsored Western German state, the Soviet German state may, a year or two from now, bring about a most dangerous explosion.

It has already created a very serious situation by giving to Dr. Adenauer's newly born regime a better bargaining position with the occupation powers. Millions of Germans are looking toward the West, not because they are attracted by the ideals of Western democracy, but because they fear and hate the Soviet-fathered Communist regimes. But there is always the danger that the Soviet puppet state may confuse many Germans by emphasizing its "nationalist" character and presenting itself as the leader in the great fight for "German unity."

NOW, regardless of their political affiliations, the overwhelming majority of the people in Western Germany are ardently nationalistic. Dr. Kurt Schumacher, Socialist opposition leader, is trying to convince the German workers that he is at least as nationalist as the rightist German nationalists. The only party in Western Germany that can afford to put less emphasis on its "nationalism" is the Christian Democrats, whose leader, Dr. Konrad Adenauer, dares to advocate close cooperation with the West, particularly France. It is inspired by the West's great spiritual power—the Vatican.

Some rightist German nationalists may, from time to time, flirt with the idea of an illegitimate political liaison with the Soviets. But the Christian Democrats cannot be seduced by the East. The Social Democratic leaders would, of course, lose their heads under Soviet rule, but their voters could, theoretically, adjust themselves to the new regime.

There is, however, no possible adjustment for either the leaders or the adherents of the Christian Democrats. They know that they can survive only in a Western-style Germany. Unfortunately, the overwhelming majority of the members of this Catholic confessional political party are in Western Germany. Being Catholic confessional, it will not attract many Germans in Eastern Germany, which is predominantly Protestant. These Germans look mostly toward Dr. Adenauer's regime because it is anti-Communist.

DR. ADENAUER is well aware of his limitations, but being a very skillful politician, he is trying to turn them to his advantage. In all his talks with Western diplomats he continually emphasizes the necessity of making concessions that would strengthen his regime and make it more attractive to people in both zones of Germany. This gives particular importance to the irritating problem of dismantling.

The fight against dismantling has become, for many Germans, the fight for Germany's "right to live"—the fight for German dignity. In this fight the Germans find allies in many Americans who would like to put an end to dismantling in order to reduce the financial burden of the occupation.

The British attitude is more complicated. On the one hand they want to strengthen the Bonn regime; on the other they fear Germany's rearmament, and even her too speedy recovery which would mean a new threat to British exporters. But the French are thinking primarily in terms of security. They are terrified by the latest news that the September index of industrial production in the British and American zones has reached the record figure of 95 percent of the 1936 average.

All this makes the task of Secretary Acheson extremely difficult. While he feels it desirable to do all possible to strengthen Dr. Adenauer's regime in Bonn, he is aware of the danger that in strengthening it too much he may weaken the position of Robert Schuman, France's Foreign Minister, the prominent and intelligent advocate of French-German understanding. The only way to strengthen Dr. Adenauer and M. Schuman simultaneously is by building a western European unity in which both Germany and France will feel secure.

But this is unfortunately made impossible by Britain, whose leaders now openly admit that they do not believe western European unity can be achieved and are therefore determined to give precedence to their commonwealth interests over those of Europe.

Reply to Yarnell

In regard to the November 8 letter from Admiral Yarnell, it is only fair to point out that, while his definition of the job of Chief of Naval Operations is accurate as far as it goes, it does not go far enough.

The Chief of Naval Operations occupies the highest position in the purely military branch of the Navy. However, this job is so complex that he cannot also possess all the knowledge required to make top-policy decisions. It is, instead, his duty to enforce these decisions.

Our political philosophy has always demanded that the military be under the control of duly elected civilian officials and their appointees, who in turn remain responsible to the voting public. The system is one perhaps a bit less efficient than military government, but infinitely more in accord with the basic democratic principles on which the country was founded.

Therefore, when Congress passed the Unification Act, and the Navy Department acted according to its requirements, it was not Denfeld's place to oppose it and support opposition by those under his command.

The Air Force did not rely on "name-calling," as Admiral Yarnell charges. The rebuttal of Navy testimony (fact and fiction), point by point, and backed by better facts than the grossly inaccurate strategic bombing myth, was thoroughly presented by both Secretary Symington and General Vandenberg. Greece's Aims

I find myself getting a bit wroth when I read a letter such as Hubert Page's of November 4 on "Greece's Aims."

I have returned rather recently from Greece after a 15-month stay during which I had the opportunity to travel extensively throughout that country.

Mr. Page states that Greece was fighting for self-preservation in the second World War on the side of the Western democracies. Greece could have remained neutral but she selected to fight and did fight alone for six months, giving the Western powers a chance to arm. I know that there is more real democracy in Greece than in any other. Her papers definitely have freedom of the press, to give one example.

Mr. Page implies that cries of communism in Greece were really a case of "wolf, wolf." I have seen hundreds and hundreds of terribly wounded soldiers. Since 1947 over 37,000 have been killed or wounded. Thousands of legs and arms have been torn off by the satanic mines. The Communists were fiendish in inflicting mental torture. They invaded thousands of unarmed villages at night, plundered, killed the aged, burned the houses and kidnaped young girls.

We had certified observers present during the Greek election who will emphatically testify that it was a just election. The Communists scream vehemently that it was "fixed," but that is to be expected. The King and Queen are true Christians and Greeks even though the King's great-grandfather came from another European country.

Mr. Page further states that only with our aid were the Greek rulers able to restore peace to Greece. He errs—the Greek soldier with American aid restored peace. The Greek rulers claimed to have won the war single-handed.

There is great poverty in Greece. Everywhere I went I was welcome because I was an American. I was told constantly to come back and tell Americans "thank you for the help and food sent to Greece, everyone loves 'Barba' Truman. ('Barba' means 'uncle')."

I feel that Greece must be helped to her feet after a 10-year war. She must be well on her way to recovery before being left to stand alone.

Aid's Effects

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch, on October 29, reprinted a cartoon from your paper entitled "Halloween in Europe," showing a witch and her black poverty cat flying on her broom over Britain and France. High above was a full Halloween moon.

How come a full moon in Europe on Halloween and only a half full one in Missouri? Do you think it was due to the senseless pouring of billions into Europe, the last few years, the military aid, free trade pacts, imports, lend lease, UNRRA, Marshall Plan and Atlantic Pact aid that fattened their moon into a full cheese and left ours only a shrunken half?

"Asia's Revolt"

As an individual and as a resident of the State of Washington, may I compliment and commend you on your editorial of November 4 with respect to the new republic of the United States of Indonesia. Your comment on this recent development is one of the most useful and timely comments which I have seen in a long time.

It is, I think, particularly important because it relates to "attitude," and attitudes in the long run, are the most important factor in these international affairs.

For many years as a resident of Washington, D. C., I was a faithful reader of The Washington Post. I am glad that it is maintaining and even advancing its standards.

Lewis' Egg

The picture of John L. Lewis published November 10 along with the announcement of his calling the miners back to work bears striking resemblance to a Buff Cochin hen laying an egg. Could there be any possible connection?

"Vatican And The Judges"

Congratulations on your editorial of November 9, "Vatican and the Judges." To the extent that such forthright and succinct expression of an all too common point of view tends to focus attention on cardinal principles it must be acclaimed as creditable public service.

Clearly The Washington Post's recent reiteration of the principle that "under no circumstance can a judge acknowledge and approve an unjust law" frightens certain of us. Personal apprehensions occasioned by this unequivocal utterance stem from an inherent suspicion or rational realization—no matter how ardently resisted or suppressed—that in some particulars the present law of the land contradicts the natural law?

Confronted by this dilemma many contrive to justify their adherence to the dominant American philosophy of expediency ("My country — right or wrong!") by questioning the determinability of the natural law. May I ask what, indeed, is the law of the land? If it be so truly positive and absolute as advocates of its supremacy contend then certainly we Americans have been defrauded by generations of lawyers, judges, and statesmen who have at our expense presumed to "interpret" this more readily determinable law.

Judges are officially qualified for their office only after subscribing to the appropriate oath of office. By its very nature an oath contains a gesture of reverence to God. Consider the anomaly of swearing before God to pursue a course of action in opposition to the law of God!

It is manifest that unjust laws could not proceed from God, and national beings can therefore hardly be constrained to consider themselves conscientiously bound to uphold them.

JOHN H. WRIGHT.
Silver Spring, Md.

Your cogently argued editorial begins by praising the Pope for making it clear to judges that the natural law, or the law of God, takes precedence over man-made law. It then goes on, in effect, to express the hope that judges in Communist countries will take note of this and that judges in the United States will not.

We may, perhaps, disregard the curious argument as to distance, since such judgments do not depend on eyesight; nor does your journal withhold comments on the actions of judges in Yugoslavia on the grounds that it is a "distant land." The argument rests, then, on the existence of "representative government," and raises a fundamental issue. Your claim clearly implies either (a) that a representative government cannot pass laws which conflict with the natural law or (b) that, if it does, then, in such cases, the natural law must give way and the civil law prevail.

The first alternative is a simple claim for "the infallibility of the people." The second alternative goes much deeper and is identical with the claim made by the Communists: namely, that there is no natural law which takes precedence over the will of the people.

The implications of either alternative are too wide to go into here, but I submit that we should be careful about applauding universal statements in their application to others and deprecating them in their application to ourselves.

CHARLES C. HAMILTON.
Washington.

I am a Protestant and as such find this article just as repugnant as would anyone who believes in God. To state that the judges of this land should not uphold the law of God as against the law of the land is the greatest of untruths, for the laws of this land are based upon the laws of God.

It is regrettable that today there sit upon the benches of this land, judges of all faiths who do not hold to these fundamentals, having little or no respect for God or His laws, and it is to these that the Pope is speaking. I, for one, am glad that as the Pope he has spoken, in the hope that these judges will take heed and search their hearts when making future decisions in the courts of justice.

Attack on Monopolies Slighted

By Drew Pearson

THE press, for some reason, has pretty much glossed over the no-holds-barred attack on big business monopolies by Congressman Celler's House Judiciary Committee. Newsmen especially ignored the testimony of T. K. Quinn, former chairman of the General Electric Finance Co., who vigorously attacked the press for hushing up anti-monopoly news while playing up A. &. P. chain store advertisements.

The former big business executive, who quit "because of my convictions," kept Chairman Celler on the edge of his chair with such blunt comments as:

"If Congress doesn't curb monopoly now, we will wake up very soon and find ourselves in a complete socialistic society . . . Congress must take a resolute hold of these runaway monsters . . . Unless the Government steps in we, the people, are doomed."

Stalin, said Quinn, "could take lessons" from our own corporation overlords.

"Stockholders of General Electric and General Motors have about the same control over company management that the Russian people exercise in the Politburo," he asserted. "No control, no voice whatever. It is the practice of large corporations to refer you to their large number of stockholders, but they neglect to tell you that 75 percent of all stockholders in our great corporations own less than $5000 in stock."

Quinn was completely candid about the so-called "competitive" position of his old firm, General Electric, and General Motors in the refrigerator field. Whereas the lower price-range manufacturers were driven out of business, he said, the two big outfits couldn't afford a price war on refrigerators.

"Was that due to the fact that you had interlocking directorates and common banking interests?" inquired Celler.

"Well, there was no actual agreement that could be attacked under the antitrust laws," answered Quinn, "but you just have an understanding. You do not start a war among big people like that. It would cause too much bloodshed."

New Indian ARROW

THE American Indians have now emulated the veterans, the farmers and the big utilities by forming a lobby in Washington. What they are seeking is not a Government handout, but equal rights and education.

The Indians call their new organization A.R.R.O.W.—which stands for "American Restitution and Righting of Old Wrongs." The purpose is not only to influence Congress, but to dramatize the Red Man's story to the American public.

One project will be to show documentary films of Indian squalor—a shockingly different picture from America's romantic idea of proud, brightly feathered chieftains. The films will show Indians living in filthy, medieval huts, wasting away from disease and starvation.

Tuberculosis and infant mortality among Indians are eight times the national averages. The Red Cross reports that American Indians have "diets scantier, and tuberculosis worse, than Europe at its lowest ebb." On the Navajo Reservation, 51.4 percent of all babies born in 1939 were dead by 1944.

Despite the alarming disease rate, however, the Government doesn't maintain a single hospital on the two-million-acre Papago Reservation in southern Arizona.

The Government is bound by treaty to educate the Indians. Yet the schools are so understaffed and inadequate that, on the Navajo Reservation, the average youngster receives only 10 months' schooling. Sixty percent get no schooling at all.

Merry-Go-Round

IT WASN'T the United States Government that sold Bolivia the P-38 that helped kill 55 people, but Paul Aubin, an Air Force veteran, who sells surplus military planes and parts to hot-blooded South American governments . . . Bob Allen's latest book, "Our Sovereign State," has been made "must" reading at the National War College. The senior Army, Navy and Air Force officers who are students there have been told to read it as the best authority on mismanagement in certain State governments.

Discrimination at Hiroshima

THE Australian government has received an angry letter from the Japanese-American Citizens League regarding the treatment of Japanese-Americans at Hiroshima, where Australian troops were stationed.

Forty Japanese-American scientists and technicians, doing research on the effects of the atom bomb, have been shut out of Australian housing, hotels and clubs open to white Americans.

"Many of these same American Nisei, now so curtly denied facilities by Australia, served with the Allied Translator and Interpreter Service during the war," the league protested. "This organization provided virtually all of the combat intelligence. Its men and officers served faithfully and loyally with the Australian troops during the war.

"We feel it is a bitter commentary upon the Australian sense of justice that those who served her in time of need now are the objects of her prejudice and discrimination."

Fulton Oursler's Modern Parables

Great Performance

DEAR Friends and Gentle Hearts:

In the days of my youth, I was often assured that "God moves in a mysterious way His wonders to perform." In today's brash era of disbelief, God moves just as mysteriously as ever before. But His wonders bless the deserving, which makes me think of Nannie and her clowning in the face of death.

Nannie was a homely lass, born to bring up other people's children and never to have any of her own. One day she was hired to join the household staff of friends of mine in England, to take care of their little boy.

Very soon my friends discovered that Nannie had one incorrigible habit, which was to believe in the goodness of God and the rightness of all things, no matter what bad luck befell. Her implacable cheerfulness sometimes got on the family's nerves. A little griping now and then would have been a welcome relief.

Pollyanna was bad enough, but after all, she was an attractive young girl; here was a gaunt old maid who, when the wind blew the roof off the house and the rain ruined the best carpets, went around happily singing hymns.

That, nevertheless, was the way Nannie lived her life, and her persevering good humor won the affection of the child of my friends until the mother was almost jealous. It happened then that another little one was expected, and Nannie assured her mistress that she would be able to take care of the two just as well as one. Sad to say, that was never necessary; a month before the new baby was due, the little boy who loved Nannie so much fell ill of scarlet fever and died with his arms around her thin and wrinkled neck. The great house became a place of gloom, of muted voices and tears.

One day at breakfast a week after the funeral, my friend barked at Nannie:

"What are you always grinning at? Your behavior is very out of place!"

With a determined air, Nannie walked toward the angry master of the household and laid two brawny hands on his shoulders.

"There is a new little soul coming to this house," she told him. "Why should he—or maybe she—come into gloom like this? Boy or girl, your new baby should be welcomed with happiness. If nobody else can smile for him, or her, I can and I am going to."

My friend decided that perhaps she was right. He raised the shades in the darkened room and told his wife what Nannie had said. It took courage to follow her smile, but husband and wife managed it.

There must have been a blessing in that courage, too, because I have never heard more genuine laughter from anyone than from the new son of theirs, now a man grown. He grew up adoring Nannie and he was the one who, just a few years ago, told me of the fantastic fidelity of his old nurse to her policy of cheerfulness when the showdown came to her.

It was a grilling test of her creed, because now Nannie herself was in pain and in danger of death. She was taken to a London hospital and operated on; but in spite of her determined cheerfulness, she did not seem able to get well. Parts of the intricate, abdominal machinery within her would not come together and heal, and for months she lay suffering in her bed, one of a long line of cots in a public ward. Yet, day after day, she cheered her neighbors, joking with them, making them laugh, all but one.

That was the woman who lay to her right, a lean, groaning old lady who knew that for her death must come, at the latest, before the month was out. Refusing all comfort, she lay muttering and cursing her fate.

For many days Nannie tried to make that woman smile, but all in vain. Finally, one spring morning she said:

"Honey, let me ask you something: Didn't you ever used to smile when you was well?"

"No! I never had nothing to smile at."

"And didn't you ever laugh? You must have laughed at least once in your life!"

"Yes," conceded the miserable old woman, "I did once upon a time; matter of fact, I nearly split my sides laughing, but that was a long time ago. I was at a circus and I laughed at a clown."

"What did the clown do that made you laugh?"

"He stood on his head."

And now Nannie, who had not stirred from her bed in a month, rolled back her blankets and put her bare feet down on the floor. She got down on her knees, then lifted her feet behind her to the bed. With excruciating effort, she at last managed to stand on her head. The whole ward applauded her desperate performance—but her next-door neighbor laughed and laughed.

Nannie did that crazy stunt because that was her way and nothing could have stopped her. And God seems to have moved in a mysterious way, because nothing can stop Him. The unknitted parts within that cheerful old cut-up, parts that would not heal before, now fell together; they caught and held, and from that moment on Nannie herself began to be a well woman again.

This old nurse could not argue with the skeptics of today; but they are the poorer, as you would be, and I, if we had nothing in our lives to be as faithful to she has been to her simple creed! Faithfully yours,

FULTON OURSLER.

Matter of Fact

Matthews Bucks Tough Clique

By Joseph and Stewart Alsop

ACCORDING to all reports, Admiral Forrest Sherman has taken hold remarkably quickly in his new role as Chief of Naval Operations. The preliminary house-cleaning is well under way. But to understand the enormous difficulties which still confront him and Secretary of the Navy Francis Matthews, it is necessary to examine some of the inner history which led up to Sherman's replacement of Admiral Louis Denfeld. For this inner history reveals the ruthless determination of the rebellious admirals, under the leadership of Admiral Arthur Radford. And no one doubts that the admirals are still rebellious.

The extraordinary lengths to which the rebels were willing to go were first demonstrated at the beginning of October, when Matthews called a meeting of the top Pentagon admirals in his office. The meeting was attended by Matthews, Denfeld, Admiral John Price, Vice Chief of Naval Operations, who was Radford's chief Pentagon ally, and most of the department's highest ranking officers.

Matthews told the admirals that he and Denfeld had been conferring with representatives of the House Armed Services Committee, which had been hearing the charges concerning B-36 procurement. Together they had decided to bring the hearings to a close, on the grounds that further testimony would endanger the national security.

Price and a pro-Radford minority at the meeting strongly protested, Price saying that he would not go along unless Radford, not then in Washington, agreed. But a majority of those present sided with Matthews and Denfeld and the decision stood. The rebels seemed to have lost.

Report Traced

NEXT day stories appeared in the press describing the meeting in detail, and implying that Matthews was trying to stifle the Navy. It was soon established that one of the pro-Radford group at the meeting had turned the information over to "Operation 23," the section then covertly fighting unification, and OP-23 had passed the story on to the press.

As was intended, this device forced reconsideration of the decision. On the afternoon of October 3, Matthews, Denfeld, Admiral Radford (who had arrived in Washington) and a few others met with Armed Services Committee Chairman Carl Vinson. Matthews again recommended on security grounds against public hearings, and Denfeld joined him. Radford, breaking openly with his two chiefs, violently objected. But Vinson decided to end the hearings, at least until the next session of Congress. Again the rebels seemed to have lost.

Next day, the Crommelin letters were handed to the press. There is not the slightest doubt that these letters were prepared in advance for precisely such an eventuality. Matthews, to whom the letters were ostensibly addressed, read Denfeld's indorsement for the first time in the papers. Denfeld had expressed completely contrary opinions to Matthews a few weeks before, when Matthews had recommended him for reappointment. It soon transpired that Denfeld's signature had been obtained by the pro-Radford men on his staff and that he had no idea of its significance.

At this point Matthews decided the time had came to assert his authority. He and Defense Secretary Louis Johnson went to the White House on October 5 and asked for authority to replace Denfeld and to use strong measures to bring the rebellious admirals into line. President Truman asked them instead to adopt a wait and see policy.

Effect Achieved

MEANWHILE, the Crommelin letters had had the effect intended. In a secret vote, the Armed Services Committee showed a majority of one for public hearings. By this time the situation in the Navy Department was such that the Radford group of admirals simply by-passed their civilian chief, refusing to consult him on their testimony before the committee. Denfeld did agree to work with Matthews on his testimony, yet Matthews in the end read Denfeld's statement, siding squarely with the Radford rebels, in a press release.

Denfeld's role was understandable, in view of the enormous pressure brought to bear on him. And there is no doubt of the sincerity of Radford, Price, G. F. Bogan and the other rebellious admirals. But the fact remains that the methods used to force the inquiry were downright disgraceful. Moreover, this inner history of the affair demonstrates that it was more than a mere honest difference of opinion. It was a covert revolt, not only against unification and the Joint Chiefs of Staff strategy, but against the constitutional principle of civilian control of the armed services.

Sherman's appointment does not end the matter. Matthews, a stubborn man, is determined to do the impossible and reassert civilian control. Sherman, by dissolving OP-23, replacing Price, and disciplining Crommelin, has left no doubt where he stands. Yet, meanwhile, these two top officials of the Navy Department are deeply disliked and distrusted by the powerful and still determined group led by Radford, who is himself still the commander of the Pacific Fleet. In view of the fact that the Navy has yet to solve its vital, basic problem, control of the seas despite the challenge of the highspeed Soviet submarine, this is about as unhealthy a situation as can well be imagined.

Our Political Economy

The Welfare State Has a Limit

By Ysabel and Robert Rennie

SPEAKING only a day apart, two prominent Americans have had their say on one of the touchiest subjects of our time, the welfare state. Vannevar Bush, president of the Carnegie Institution, called the welfare state "an opiate which tends to destroy the virile characteristics which have made us great." President Truman, on the contrary, viewed it as "the main stream of American life (which) rolls steadily onward toward a better world."

Speaking in St. Paul, the President outlined his welfare program in these terms: (1) A "fair" price for farmers; (2) "good" wages and "fair" bargaining power for workers; (3) "fair" opportunities for small business against monopolies; (4) protection of natural resources; (5) assured income for the elderly and disabled; (6) social security against illness, accident and unemployment; (7) "decent" housing at "fair" prices; (8) assured educational opportunities for youth; (9) national health insurance; (10) civil rights for all.

If the President did not define "fair," "good," and "decent," it is because nobody can. The program sounds pleasantly in the ears, as does the term welfare state. Yet a bitter political campaign has just been waged in New York over the whole concept of a welfare economy, and in Britain the lines are drawn for a major political contest next year. Why should "welfare state" be fighting words to so many people?

Deadwood Rewarded

ESKIMOS leave their aged and sick to die of exposure. This is for the elemental reason that life is so hard, food so scarce, that he who cannot produce cannot be fed.

At the other extreme is Sir William Beveridge's plan for womb-to-tomb security. Those who favor an all-out welfare economy believe in maternity payments, child subsidies, wider education, free medical services, unemployment insurance and old-age pensions. These benefits must be provided by those who are working and producing—not the children, the sick or the aged who receive them, but the group between 20 and 65 whose labor alone can make them possible.

The mere concept of womb-to-tomb security makes economic liberals throw up their hands. Looking at the economy as a whole, they see that if effort is rewarded in strict proportion to output, and if, at the same time, the slacker is severely penalized, there will be higher productivity and greater wealth for all. A welfare economy, with its progressive taxes and redistribution of income, according to this view, penalizes the most productive and rewards the deadwood. This is at best a witless procedure, and at worst, in Vannevar Bush's words, it makes for "a dead level of existence far below our possibilities."

The advocates of the welfare state, on the other hand, look less at our total wealth and its future rate of growth than at the inequalities of present distribution. Incentives and initiative are very well, they say, but what have they done about slums, ill health, old age, depression and the poverty that breeds poverty? What good is initiative to the man who cannot find work? How efficient are the poor and sick? What about that third of a nation President Roosevelt once saw as ill-housed, ill-clad and ill-nourished?

'Rights' of Serf

"INDIVIDUALISM" is not an old word in our language. It came into English less than a century ago with the translation of Tocqueville's "Democracy in America." Even the concept goes back only to the Saint-Simonian socialists of a few years earlier.

Much older are societies which, while providing little economic freedom, accepted responsibility for each person in them. The serf was tied to the land; but the land was his by right, and no overlord could take it from him.

The difference between social security under feudalism and our modern concept of the word lies less in its philosophy than in its scope. Each lord was responsible for his dependents. Today we are putting responsibility on the national state.

This welfare state has crept up on us. A century ago men debated the propriety of a police force, and stubborn Englishmen fought the encroachment of sewage systems. Then gradually we accepted fire protection as a rightful function of the community, as well as free public schools.

The wider the area of social service, the more manpower and resources are diverted from other ends. We have met much of the cost by progressive taxation, which means that the minority who pay high taxes get relatively smaller benefits, and the majority who receive the larger benefits pay the smaller taxes. Since this means that most people get more than they pay for, they have continued to support the New Deal, and now the Fair Deal, programs.

Well Runs Dry

THERE is a limit, however, to getting something for nothing. In his budget message this year, Sir Stafford Cripps told the British people that they have already reached this point. From now on, new social services will be charged to the workers themselves. Progressive taxation has reached its limit.

If we in this country should reach the same point, there might be a critical revaluation of our welfare program. We do not know what the answer would be, for millions of Americans have proved they will buy security even when they foot the bill themselves; witness the 202 billion dollars of life insurance in force in the United States, and the 61 million individuals who voluntarily participate in hospital insurance plans.

In the last analysis, we are not Eskimos. Many who cry loudest against the welfare state come to it for regulation and protection: farmers want guaranteed prices; miners want Government to buy gold and silver; retailers demand "fair trade" laws; manufacturers seek tariff protection.

It is scarcely surprising under the circumstances that those who work for wages and salaries want the sheltering umbrella extended to them. When it comes right down to it, the people who will accept the penalties of a free economy along with its rewards can be counted on the fingers of one hand.

Machines Speed Up a Migration

By Hodding Carter

GREENVILLE, Miss. — Behind the brief announcement that Mississippi's population has declined about 50,000 since 1940 is a dramatic and unfinished story of change in the living patterns of two million people.

Mississippi is the only Southern State among the five in the Nation whose populations are less now than they were nine years ago.

Until 1940, there were more Negroes than white people in Mississippi. Today an estimated 45 percent of the population is Negro.

Most of the Negro population is rural. Almost half of the million Negroes are concentrated in the cotton-producing counties along the Mississippi River. Their standards of living are the Nation's lowest. They are largely unskilled agricultural workers. Their submarginal status in respect to income, education, housing and health is the principal reason for Mississippi's low standing among the States in almost every category. Their unenviable position largely explains not only their own steady migration from Mississippi, but also that of the skilled, educated white youth who see relatively poor opportunity in a State whose economy rests on such a foundation.

The war accelerated this exodus, particularly of the Negro. In most instances, initial mechanization of Mississippi agriculture was not the cause but the result of this migration. Now, however, continuing mechanization is also bringing about an unwilling displacement which will be aggravated by reduction in cotton acreage and the State's incredibly rapid change to livestock and grain farming.

The most obvious result is a decline in population. There are other less discernible results of more positive nature. Mississippi's larger towns and cities are doubling in size even as the overall population decreases. The farm worker is becoming a town dweller. The depopulated farm approaches modernity in its turn to mechanization and diversification. The factor of numerical pressures in race relationships becomes less serious. The problem of the low-income Negro becomes more demanding of a solution as he becomes an urban responsibility within the State or wherever else he migrates.

The drive for greater industrialization of Mississippi gains impetus because of pressing immediacies. A host of social problems that were not so readily recognized against the traditional background become important challenges to the self-conscious towns and cities.

There remains the question of the vacuum which is created by a shrinking population. Here the long-range outlook is not discouraging, for there will eventually be a population replacement.

What is happening in Mississippi means greater occupational opportunity rather than less. The diversified farm and the end-product industry will attract or retain more people than has a lopsided cotton economy which has blighted the State for 150 years.

Shy Britons Spurn Job of Town Crier

TIDESWELL, England (AP).—This village has been looking for a town crier for seven years without success. In desperation, the town council boosted the wages from one shilling (20 cents) to five shillings ($1) for each cry of "oyez, oyez" to announce a notice. Still no one stepped forward.

"They're shy," commented Benjamin Lomas Fletcher, chairman of the council. "It takes a lot of nerve, you know, to go through the streets ringing a bell and shouting 'oyez' or 'hear ye.' Any sort of man will do, so long as he has a loud voice."

Rapid Transfusions

By Alton L. Blakeslee

Associated Press Science Editor

NEW YORK.—A quick new way of giving blood transfusions, by pumping blood into patients, is being used at Memorial Hospital here.

A pint of blood can be given up to 20 times faster than by the usual method. It brings quick benefits to patients who have lost dangerous amounts of blood during operations, or by accidents. It might also save lives in atomic war or peacetime disasters when many victims needed blood promptly.

The new method was devised by Dr. Virginia K. Pierce of the surgical staff of Memorial Hospital. It is described by Drs. Pierce, Guy F. Robbins and Alexander Brunschwig, all surgeons of the famous cancer center, in the October issue of Surgery, Gynecology and Obstetrics.

Blood transfusions usually are given by suspending a flask of blood over the patient and letting it flow by gravity into a vein. It takes up to half an hour or more to give 1 pint of blood this way.

The new method uses a tank of compressed oxygen to speed the flow. The oxygen flows through tubing into the air vent of the flask of blood, and the pressure pushes the blood into the patient's vein.

THE main value, the surgeons said, is as a quick antidote or as a preventive of shock, one of the great hazards of major surgery. Patients can suddenly go into shock or collapse when they lose too much blood. Their blood pressure falls and their body tissues do not get enough oxygen.

The new method has been used successfully on more than 200 patients at Memorial in major operations for cancer. In many cases it is believed to have prevented death from shock.

It is not used unless a patient has lost a good deal of blood. Otherwise, the quick injection of new blood could overload the heart and cause trouble or death. Only enough new blood is pumped in to restore the normal volume, and it is transfused at the rate the blood is lost.

The fast transfusions also can benefit victims of burns or accidents, and would be helpful in disasters or war when many patients needed transfusions, the surgeons said. A team of specially trained technicians could give transfusions to dozens of person in the time now required to treat only a few.

The equipment is simple and can be set up in any hospital or aid center.

them of their duty to be fully observant of civil law, as the expression of God's will," he continued.

"It will remind them that the law of God must be taken into consideration by anyone who aspires to fulfill the important duties of the judiciary office. No one who believes in God can deny that His law is the fundamental norm of human conduct.

"If our people ever accept the tenet that civil legislation is the basic standard of right and wrong, so that the state could declare today that a course of conduct is an act of virtue, and tomorrow could declare it is a crime, we should be well on the way toward totalitarianism," Dr. Connell stated.

The theologian, a member of the Redemptorist Order, said that as he interpreted the Holy Father, he was simply saying Catholic judges may grant divorces when they meet the strict requirements of civil law, but that they should never give divorce moral sanction.

On the divorce question, which he said was causing the main stir in this country, Dr. Connell said, in part:

"A Catholic judge believes in conscience that the marriage bond is permanent according to the law of God. Hence, when a couple who are validly married seek a divorce from him he is convinced that he cannot separate them in such wise that in the sight of God they are no longer husband and wife and have a right to contract new marriages.

"However, it is not intrinsically wrong for him to declare that, as far as the civil law is concerned, they are no longer to be regarded as husband and wife.

"May Not B Taken Lightly"

"Hence, for a good reason he is allowed to make such a declaration. The couple in question have no reasonable cause to complain that they are not receiving all that the civil law grants them . . .

"Consequently, the granting of a divorce, when it is permissible for him to grant it, may not be taken lightly by the judge. There must be good reason for his action.

"For example, if the reasons alleged for the divorce by both parties or by one of them are flimsy or false, so that they do not satisfy even the requirements of civil law, he must refuse their petition.

"He must have a good reason to justify his own conscience—for example, the realization that the couple cannot be reconciled and that matters will grow worse if they are not granted what they are seeking."

In the eyes of the Catholic judge, said Dr. Connell, "the marriage of two Protestants is a sacrament, which is just an exalted and just as holy as the marriage of two Catholics."

Dr. Connell analyzed the main portion of the Pope's speech, which was an ennunciation of four principles. The text of Dr. Connell's statement follows in part:

"The first principle is concerned with the part which the judge plays in the administration of justice. The Pope asserts that the judge may not lay the entire responsibility for the injustice of a sentence which he passes on the law and the lawmakers. In other words, when he passes sentence in accordance with a law which he is convinced is unjust he may not salve his conscience by saying that he is merely the mouthpiece of the law . . .

Cites Military Trials

"The second principle concerns a sentence which would oblige a person to perform an action that is intrinsically immoral. The Pope states that under no condition may a judge pass such a sentence . . .

"It is interesting to note that this principle was invoked in some of the military trials after the recent war when it was decreed that a subordinate official is not justified in commanding acts of cruelty and brutality merely because he was commanded to do so by his own commanding officer.

"The third principle," said the theologian, "concerns the approbation of an unjust law. The Pope states that a judge may never expressly acknowledge or approve an immoral law (which, he says, would not be a valid law in the eyes of God)."

Dr. Connell said, "It should be noted, in view of what is stated in the fourth principle, that the application of a law does not necessarily mean its approval. In this third principle the Pope is concerned only with the latter procedure.

"Thus, in a Communist-dominated land where the law forbids any protest against the tenets of communism a judge who would not only send a person to jail for rejecting the principles of communism, but would also deliver a speech upholding communism, would fail against this principle.

'Emphasizes Distinction'

"The fourth principle emphasizes the distinction just made between the approbation and the application of an unjust law. The Pope states that at times a judge may apply an unjust law to a particular case in order to avoid greater evils; thus, in the case just proposed, the judge might be justified in sending the anti-Communist to jail, in accordance with the unjust law, though he could not manifest approval of the law.

"However, Pope Pius XII adds, the judge may never go to the extent of inflicting a death sentence on an innocent person as the application of an unjust law.

"Evidently, only a fine or prison term is visualized as something sometimes permissible as a application of an unjust law," Dr. Connell declared.

Justice Clark's Supreme Bench Alignment Waits on Time

New Jurist Only Occupies Office Of Liberal Predecessor, Murphy

By Chalmers M. Roberts
Post Reporter

First of two articles on newly appointed Supreme Court justices.

The accents were strong, the voice was rather nasal, the volume booming in the usually velvet hush of the Supreme Court of the United States. Mr. Justice Clark was reading the first opinion of his career.

He spoke, from carefully penciled notes, about the "U-nited States," about "di-rect taxes" and about a 'u-nanimous opinion." It was a far different voice from the aesthetic tones of the man who four months ago sat in the next seat, the man Tom C. Clark succeeded—the late Frank Murphy.

On the wall of Clark's office (it had been Murphy's) is an autographed photo of Frank Murphy, darling of the liberals, inscribed to Attorney General Tom C. Clark, "a good public servant." Administration liberals, however, don't expect the tie to go any further.

New Justices' Alignment

It will take some months for Clark to develop a record of votes on the high court and write enough opinions to place him formally on one wing or another of the not-too - stable liberal - conservative Court division. The only possible surprise would be to find him failing consistently to side with the Vinson-Frankfurter-Jackson - Burton more conservative side, instead of with the Black-Douglas-and-maybe-Reed-and/or - Minton side.

A Supreme Court justice may not with propriety discuss with a reporter any case before the Court. But he may philosophize a bit on his own feelings, prior to ascending the bench, on such a subject as civil rights.

For as Attorney General of the United States Tom Clark has been the Nation's prosecutor in these post-war years of public passions over Government loyalty programs, Communist menaces and Soviet spies.

He sat for four years in the Cabinet of a Democratic Administration which has had the violent opposition of an important part of the Democratic Party, the Southerners.

Retrospective Survey

This week, looking back, Clark said:

"I took the position that the party, since 1933 has been committed to the program of Harry S. Truman. He has placed the mosaic where you could see it better than before.

"I always thought on the civil rights issue that I could even sit down with Dick Russell (Senator Russell, leader of the Southerners), or Tom Connally (Senator from Texas) and (Speaker) Sam Rayburn and work out something acceptable to all of us. I never was called on to do so."

To Clark the ascent to the Supreme Court at 50 has brought "an important change from the partisan politics that gets you into controversies." He said Mrs. Clark likes that, too.

Politics and Geography

"Sometimes it's a relief to get away from political feelings as we do up here," he said. "I've noticed, too, the justices leave behind their geographic feelings as well." Clark is a Texan. He added:

"I've found up here that you have to be much more careful about every word. I used to make a couple of speeches a week as Attorney General.

He mentioned his first decision, handed down last week. Originally he had used the word "given" instead of "afforded" in this sentence:

"And if the State has afforded nothing for which it can ask return, its taxing statute offends against that due process of law it is our duy to enforce."

Clark explained that one of his fellow justices pointed out a State might "afford" its citizens all sorts of things of which they might not take advantage. Hence "given" was not a very precise word. He gratefully accepted the suggestion.

Takes His Work Home

Justice Clark has chambers next to Chief Justice Vinson, on the 2nd st. ne. side of the court building. He has huddled his desk into one corner in order to take advantage of the sunlight, partially blocked out by the vast exterior marble walls.

He does a lot of work at home, having turned a maid's room in the Clark apartment into a study with the aid of some unpainted department store bookshelves and a set of the United States Reports which once belonged to the late Chief Justice Hughes.

"I used to think the judges had a pretty easy time up here," he says with a smile. "I read in the paper this morning that the Court was meeting again after a two-weeks 'recess.' That's hardly the word. We usually meet in conference on Saturdays until 6. Last week we were finished at 4:45, though, and we have one free Saturday a month."

Meteoric Capital Career

Clark's rise in Washington has been rather meteoric. He quit a law practice back home in Dallas, a practicing bringing in around $70,000 a year, to take a $5000 job at the Justice Department. Why?

"I was interested in public law," he explained. "I had accumulated some money, nothing to brag about, but enough to live on. I considered that job a sort of internship. The only time I thought of returning home was in 1943 when my older brother was killed in a plane crash. But my younger brother went into the law firm and took over. Then President Roosevelt appointed me to head the anti-trust division."

Starting on Way Up

Clark was on the way up. It was Sam Rayburn more than anyone else who put him into the Attorney Generalship, with boosts from Tom Connally, an old friend of Clark's father, and former Representative Hatton Sumners, long a Clark family friend. The late Robert Hannegan, then Democratic National Chairman, plugged for Clark, too.

At Justice, Clark prosecuted two Democratic House members, James A. Curley and Andrew Jackson May. Both men went to jail.

"I'd just call 'em as I saw 'em in those cases, handling each one on a case basis," says Clark.

Having come from Justice to the Supreme Court, Clark has the immediate problem of considering whether he may sit in cases which originated in that department, or in which it had a hand. Each Justice has only his own conscience to guide him on that problem.

Philosophy on Cases

This is Clark's philosophy:

"I try to apply this test—whether I had any part in deciding on a suit or taking up the case on a policy level." He estimated he will be disqualified in only about 10 cases.

On the walls of the new justice's office are numerous pictures from his political past. Two frames contain his guides for the future.

One is a framed photograph of the President, inscribed "to my good friend Tom Clark, a great Attorney General who will be a great Justice. May he have a long and happy tour on the great Court."

The other is a part of a Lincoln statement presented to him when he was under attack for prosecuting the recent New York Communist trial. It is Mr. Justice Clark's answer to those who have assailed him in the past, and to those who have criticized his appointment to the Court. It begins:

"If I were to try to read, much less answer, all the attacks made on me, this shop might as well be closed for any other business."

How to Cure Bad Acoustics Pondered by Supreme Court

After 14 years of cupped ears and "What did you say?" the Supreme Court has decided to do something about the terrible acoustics in the courtroom of its 10-million-dollar marble home.

A great curved bench for the nine justices may replace the present straight one. Or the courtroom may be wired for sound. These are among ideas under consideration.

Committee at Work

The court has named a committee of three—Justice Black, senior associate justice, and Justices Clark and Minton, the new members—to find a solution. They and the court's architects will try to work out something.

However, from the listener's standpoint, the worst offenders are the justices themselves when they ask questions or make comments from the bench. Justice Black usually has his chair tilted so far back part of the courtroom can see only the top of his head.

Justice Frankfurter leans forward, but his staccato questions are difficult to catch. Justice Reed talks in subdued tones, and Chief Justice Vinson flavors his queries with a Kentucky drawl.

Justices Can't Hear

Justices at one end of the bench can hardly hear those at the other end. This is one of the reasons for the curved bench idea.

Use of individual microphones and a loud speaker system has been discussed before, but never have got anywhere because of the feeling they would be useless in the face of the justices' swivel-chairing. Lape microphones might be the answer, some think.

The courtroom has had velvet curtains added at either side of the long polished mahogany bench, but they haven't helped much. The columns on all four sides of the room make any wall change, such as the use of special acoustical tile, practically impossible without spoiling the architecture. The highly ornamented ceiling presents a similar problem.

Victory in Elections by Conservatives Wouldn't Change Things Much in Britain

(Fifth in a series)

By J. A. Livingston

There are three fundamental facts about postwar Britain that explain why the Labor government acts the way it does, and why if the Conservative Party were to regain power, it wouldn't act too differently. They are:

1. Britain still is in a war economy. Scarcity dominates: scarcity of food, of raw materials, of manpower, of gold reserves, and above all, of dollar-earning power.

2. The nation's economic balance has been permanently turned around. Before the war, Britain paid for imports of foodstuffs and raw materials out of income from foreign investments. But now that income has dwindled to 33 percent of prewar in monetary terms and 16 percent in terms of purchasing power in world markets.

Principles Would Be Kept

3. A social revolution, which seethed throughout the '30s is continuing. Income is being redistributed by taxation to narrow disparities in living standards. Price control and rationing see to it rich as well as poor share the scarcity. That's referred to as "fair shares." At the same time, basic industries have been nationalized: coal, electricity, transportation, health and money (the Bank of England). And government ownership of steel impends. Argument: The essentials of life should not be privately owned.

The Conservative Party, if elected, undoubtedly will stop nationalization of the steel industry. But it probably won't try to undo nationalization generally.

The Conservative Party would be unlikely to undo the national health plan. The Conservatives would introduce modifications but the basic principle—that everyone is entitled to low-cost medical care—now is firmly established.

Nor would a Conservative government dispense with economic controls willy-nilly. You hear about Englishmen who'd let prices rise, get rid of rationing, quotas and allocations. But if you ask, "Well, if you were in power, if you had responsibility, would you get rid of import quotas, or rationing?" they'll hedge: "The economy's not ready for it."

Controls Those of Wartime

So long as scarcity governs, any party will discover the government doesn't impose controls on the economy, but rather the economy imposes controls on the government. Broadly speaking, controls now in force are those of a war economy:

1. Regulation of investment expenditures. Outlays on new plant, equipment, highways, hospitals, housing and so on are controlled. Object: to use resources on undertakings regarded as most essential, which will tend to increase production capacity.

2. Imports are controlled, so goods and raw materials regarded as nonessential can be excluded. Purchase are made, whenever possible, from nondollar areas to conserve gold and dollars. This is accomplished through foreign-exchange controls and import licenses.

3. Scarce materials, like steel and cotton, are allocated. And certain materials are earmarked for export:

4. Rationing and price control are imposed to promote equal distribution of scarce necessities.

5. The fiscal policy is one of disinflation—at least theoretically. Heavy taxes are imposed on purchases of articles not regarded as absolute necessaries. The purpose is twofold: First, to drain off excess purchasing power; second, to cut consumption, thus freeing goods for export.

It's an exasperating economy, especially for the well-to-do and for the businessman. Middle and upper-income families find life difficult. Their standards are much below what they were before the war.

Tried Too Much Too Soon

In contrast, the average person in the low-income brackets has had his standard of living improved. Rationing assures him some meat, some milk, some bacon, and his youngsters, orange juice. Lower income children have more color in their cheeks, are taller than children of the thirties. Thus, the program of equalization may serve as the foundation for a virile, hence more energetic, population.

Life is particularly exasperating for the businessman. He can't import what he wants; he can't export what he wants; he can't buy what he wants, and he can't manufacture what he wants. As against that, the worker has unemployment benefits, old-age pensions, union security, and a feeling his job is safe.

Under the Conservative government life would be much the same.

The critism of the Labor government is that it tried too much too soon.

Certainly, by mixing social objectives with urgent postwar programs for rehabilitation and reconstruction, the Labor government has added to the burdens of a sorely burdened economy.

Labor's retort is that if social adjustments had not been made, then labor—the workers—would not have been satisfied and Britain's production could not possibly have been pushed up to where it is today, 35 percent above prewar.

Talking Instead Of Listening Costs Boy His Voice

Atlanta, Nov. 11 (AP).—"The next time," said 9-year-old James McCurry, "well, I'll just keep my big mouth shut."

Jim said he was talking with his uncle in a field when the wind blew a cocklebur into his mouth.

Jim swallowed and lost his voice.

A doctor in Canton, Ga., near his farm home, told Jim to go see a specialist in Atlanta, and quick.

The doctor at Ponce de Leon Infirmary found the trouble. The cocklebur had stopped in Jim's larynx and was stuck between the vocal cords.

The doctor got the bur out with forceps.

Jim today was able to tell everybody about his operation.

Philippine Claims Cost $500,000 Day

By Robert S. Allen

The United States is spending more than $500,000 a day paying off Philippine war damage claims, thousands of which, admittedly, have been only cursorily checked.

As of October 21, $231,857,152 had been paid by the U. S.-Philippine War Damage Commission, on 1,059,869 of the more than 1,250,000 claims filed. With approximately 235 million dollars still unspent of the 400 million dollars authorized by Congress, the commission shortly will announce payment of an additional 10 to 15 percent on large approved claims.

From Pets to Houses

So far, all approved claims up to $500 have been paid in full. The bulk of them are for losses ranging from pets to houses. The additional payment on larger claims will bring the amount up to approximately 45 percent of full value.

The commission is refusing to divulge information on large claims, on one of which it is known $750,000 already has been paid. Asked for the name of this firm, the commission's Washington office declined to reveal it. Originally the company asked for more than five million dollars which the commission reduced to $2,500,000.

Commission authorities place chief blame for failure to scrutinize claims on the law passed by Congress. It is characterized as practically unenforceable. The commission has a staff of 1080, of whom only 109 are Americans. Also, under the act, all claims must be paid by June 30, 1951.

One commissioner asserted, "It is an impossible situation. It would take more than a hundred years to examine all the claims."

He admitted that 900,000 claims up to $1000 were approved without a field check. Also, that where claims have been scrutinized, many irregularities were found. Two such cases involved Philippine cabinet members.

"When we called them on this," the commissioner said, "they begged on their knees to be allowed to withdraw their false claims. They were permitted to do so on the understanding they would make no claims of any kind."

So far, only 10 cases of fraud have been turned over to the Philippine Department of Justice. Five persons have been convicted.

Members of the commission are Frank A. Waring, chairman, former Far Eastern expert of the Export-Import Bank; John A. O'Donnell, Scranton, Pa., and Francisco A. Delgado, Philippine commissioner.

Public to See Blood Testing

Washingtonians this week will have an opportunity to watch the first public demonstration of multiple blood testing for diabetes, anemia, syphilis, RH factor and blood type.

The demonstration, announced yesterday by Oscar R. Ewing, Federal Security Administrator, is to take place at the National Trailer Coach Industrial Exhibit in the National Guard Armory from November 18-20.

A mobile laboratory, built to Public Health Service specifications, will be on hand for the tests, which will be conducted by physicians, technicians and other Health Service professional personnel. Only one blood sample will be required from each visitor. He will receive a report on his blood type and reaction to the RH test soon after the blood is taken, Ewing stated.

Results of tests for anemia, diabetes and syphilis will be sent to the visitor and to his family physician by mail.

Dr. Leonard A. Scheele, Surgeon General of the Public Health Service described use of the laboratory tests as a "real achievement" which could be of "very considerable value in illustrating the potentialities of this method of testing."

The laboratory includes a clinitron, used for the first time in this area, which is an automatic testing device which receives and processes a blood sample within two minutes.

Head of Zoroastrian Church Here From India on Visit

The Washington Post

Dasturzada Dr. Jal Pavry and his sister, Miss Bapsy Pavry

Descendant of the oldest of the Three Magi, religious head of the Liberal Zoroastrian Church in India and Iran, scholar of Oriental civilization, goodwill ambassador, advocate of world peace.

Those are only a few of the official and unofficial titles given to a distinguished Washington visitor, Dasturzada Dr. Jal Pavry, who came here last week with his sister, Miss Bapsy Pavry, to see old friends.

They made their first return visit to this country after an absence of 25 years to attend the World Parliament of Religions in New York City last month.

Head of Ancient Faith

The Dasturzada, who will not estimate the number of followers of his faith except to assure it is large, makes his home in Bombay with his sister. Bombay is the center of the Zoroastrian religion, founded by the ancient Persian prophet Zoroaster many hundreds of years ago.

In India are numerous temples where a fire, the symbol of the god, Mazda, and of purity, remains forever burning under the care of priests.

But the Dasturzada explains that his followers now have spread to Europe and America. Because of this he has a new hope—to establish temples in New York City, London and Paris.

Cultural Centers

"They would be not only a place to worship, but also a cultural center," he declares. For the Dasturzada believes that there should be more study of the ancient civilizations. During their stay in this country until next March, both he and his sister will speak before various forums on the civilizations of India and Iran.

"History repeats itself again and again. If only men could learn from the past, then we might remove the causes of war," the Dasturzada explains.

Work for World Peace

Both he and Miss Pavry have worked unceasingly for world peace, serving as delegates from their country at many international conferences for the establishment of friendly relations among nations.

Just as unceasingly during the years have they worked for India's independence based on Indo-British friendship. Like their late father, the Parsi High Priest of Bombay, they were close friends of Mahatma Gandhi. Their most treasured possessions are letters of condolence written to them by Gandhi at the time of their father's death, just two months before Gandhi's assassination.

Both the Dasturzada and Miss Pavry are graduates of Columbia University, where they became close friends of the president, the late Nicholas Murray Butler, who corresponded with the Dasturzada for many years.

They will remain in Washington until November 18, when they will return to New York City for the rest of their American visit.

Editors Pick Medina As Man of the Year

New York, Nov. 11 (U.P.).—Judge Harold Medina is the overwhelming choice of United Press client radio news editors as the "Man of the Year."

In a poll conducted among radio news editors, the jurist who conducted the New York trial of 11 Communist leaders, received more votes than all other nominees combined. President Harry Truman who won a similar poll in 1948, was far down the list this year.

The radio editors also voted Sen. Margaret Chase Smith (R., Me.) as the year's outstanding woman, and President Truman's announcement that Russia has an atomic explosion as the top news story of 1949 to date.

Mt. Calvary Cornerstone Rites Today

The cornerstone of the Mount Calvary School and convent will be laid at 4 p. m. today at 7520 Marlboro Pike, Forestville, Md.

The Right Rev. Msgr. Francis J. Loughran, pastor of St. Mary's Church, Upper Marlboro, will conduct the rites, acting for the Most Rev. Patrick A. O'Boyle, Archbishop of Washington.

The school, expected to be ready for occupancy in September, 1950, will accommodate 400 pupils in the first eight grades. An auditorium, seating more than 600, will serve temporarily as a church for the community. The congregation of more than 3000 has outgrown the present Mount Calvary Church.

Participating in today's ceremonies will be members of the Mount Calvary Holy Name Society, the Ladies Sodality and other parish organizations as well as delegations from the American Legion and the Catholic War Veterans.

British Exports During October Show Increase

London, Nov. 11 (AP).—British exports in October, the first full month since devaluation, totaled $437,080,000, Harold Wilson, president of the Board of Trade, said tonight.

The overseas sales were only $10,920,000 below the monthly record in March, when the exchange rate of the pound was $4.03. On September 18 the Labor government devalued the pound to $2.80.

Wilson said October exports showed an increase of $39,480,000 over September. October exports totaled $554,960,000, an increase over September of $47,880,000. This would leave a trade deficit of $117,880,000.

Biggest bargain in town today!

The biggest bargain in town today is the happiness, health and future of our youngsters that your pledge to our Community Chest buys!

Fourteen years old. And smart. And full of the dickens. And ready to go anywhere.

And THAT'S just the trouble! Because "anywhere" might mean on with the school. On to a good job. And on to a place as a good citizen.

OR it might mean ON INTO TROUBLE.

What's it worth to bring loving care to children when homes are broken?

What's it worth to strike a blow at juvenile delinquency?

What's it worth to have Scouting, the Y's, the recreation services that help every boy and girl get a square chance to grow up sound and sturdy?

What's it worth to help keep families together so that kids can have the solid security of a happy home life in these days when there's one divorce for every four marriages?

Show what you think it's worth when the Community Chest volunteer calls!

Remember—one pledge covers many Red Feather services. Because we have a well-managed Community Chest uniting many appeals, you are called on only once a year for all of them. So when you give, GIVE ENOUGH . . . enough for ALL Red Feather services . . . enough for a FULL year.

Old-Age Pensions Hit In California Vote

By Warren B. Francis
Los Angeles Times Staff Correspondent

California voters last Tuesday executed a political somersault and gave liberal old-age pension forces their second setback in 15 years.

After a hard-fought campaign, second in drama and intensity only to the ham 'n' eggs fight of the mid-30s, the Californians came up with an answer that suggests that the State is not as addicted to "pie-in-the-sky" philosophy as the country has assumed.

The voters yanked out of the constitution by a margin of nearly 3 to 2 a provision that heretofore appeared to be a foolproof come-on for promoters.

Party lines were not drawn clearly in the contest, but the outcome seems to indicate that the State's political opportunists are not as clever or potent as credited by outside observers.

The Californians also approved wholeheartedly an assortment of oth-r propositions they were asked to ratify. These range from authorizing the issuance of 250 million dollars worth of State bonds to help finance schools for overpopulated communities to keeping in step with the East by adopting a permanent summertime daylight saving law.

Majorities in the case of all the 12 constitutional and initiative measures were substantial. Only four of these—pensions, school bonds, daylight saving, and higher pay for legislators—aroused much interest, however.

Most political significance is found in the tally on Proposition No. 2, which wiped out last year's unusual measure overhauling the State welfare department, taking pension payments away from the counties, designating by name a hand-picked Social Welfare director, and easing in costly fashion the requirements for State benefits.

After repeated rumors that political trades were being made with an eye on 1950, the campaign about repeal of the 1948 pension scheme became a hot affair.

Warren for Repeal

Gov. Earl Warren, who still has not announced his 1950 intentions, finally declared he favored this year's repeal proposition and immediately drew a threat that George McLain, sponsor of last year's largesse, would throw 500,000 oldster votes against him if he runs for a second term or any other office.

Senator Sheridan Downey, the Democratic incumbent who has announced his candidacy for a third term next fall, belatedly opposed the repealer. So did Jimmy Roosevelt, the enigma of California politics, who was an anti-Truman leader at the 1948 Democratic National Convention and who is universally expected to announce his willingness to occupy the Governor's mansion at Sacramento next year.

Representative Helen Gahagan Douglas, the glamor girl of California liberals who has served notice she will fight Downey for the party senatorial nomination next spring, successfully avoided taking any public stand on this sizzling issue.

Preelection arguments about the pension issue were livened by a State Senate committee investigation that produced charges Pension Promoter McLain made weekly payments to a Los Angeles assemblyman and by the balkiness of Mrs. Myrtle Williams, State welfare director named under the 1948 constitutional amendment. Mrs. Williams, a key figure in McLain's pension movement, finally took the witness stand to deny she was a stooge for the old-age pension bloc.

Complicated cross-currents were obvious throughout the campaign. Most important of them revolved around the pension issue.

Advocates of the 250 million dollar school bond proposition lined up in favor of repealing the 1948 pension measure and argued the generous benefits would bankrupt the State. Organizations of the blind also worked for the repealer, since the new measure continues the $85 monthly grants to sightless needy residents.

Business and civic groups were outspoken in the successful drive to wipe out the McLain-sponsored 1948 law, citing budget figures that indicated the annual pension outlay would mount from 135 million dollars for the year ended June 30, 1948, to 270 million dollars in the 1949-50 period.

Virtually all California newspapers loosed editorial and news barrages against the McLain organization and backed the pension repealer to the limit. McLain was portrayed as full of dictatorial ambitions, and lent some credence to this theory by acting coy when asked whether he intends to run for governor next year, and boasting of ability to direct no less than 500,000 ballots in any State-wide election.

A real surprise in the pension law modification balloting was the outcome in thickly populated Los Angeles County, operations base of the McLain machine and place where oldsters are most thickly concentrated as well as most active politically.

Predictions Borne Out

Predictions that the Southland metropolis would foretell the final result were borne out after early excitement due to computation errors in the Registrar's office. The ratio was much closer in Los Angeles County than in other populous sections, but the confederation of groups working to remove objectionable features of the 1948 law rolled up a majority of about 10,000.

As the election night count went on, the Los Angeles County totals in favor of the repealer were surprisingly large. Then the tabulation was completely reversed and midway through the checking, a clerical error was discovered that produced the big early "yes" total. After some time, the "yes" ballots overcame the disapproval votes.

In San Francisco, where the pension measure was expected to be carried by only a slim edge, the voters gave the repealer a substantial lead. San Diego also went decidedly in favor of scrapping the 1948 scheme.

In voting for daylight saving, California apparently emphasized the vast change in the State's economy, from predominantly agricultural to greatly industrialized. Farm groups waged the customary vigorous war against tampering with the clock hands, but city dwellers delivered heavy majorities in favor of more before-sundown leisure time outdoors. This was particularly noticeable in Los Angeles, where the count was almost 2 to 1 for pushing clock hands forward next April 30.

The outcome of a three-way race for the only national office filled last week carried slight political implications and is nowhere considered a barometer of value in forecasting 1950 trends. Former State Senator John F. Shelley, a Democrat and president of the California Federation of Labor, won handily in the Fifth (San Francisco) District, represented for 13 consecutive terms by Richard J. Welch, who died during the summer.

Shelley's Lead 15,000

Almost complete figures show Shelley about 15,000 ahead of the second man, with a 1948 supporter of Henry Wallace far behind. Party labels were not carried on the particular form of ballot employed in off-year elections, and Republicans went into the contest supporting Lloyd J. Cosgrove, second-place candidate, in a defeatist manner, since the district for years has showed a top-heavy Democratic registration, and Welch, who voted with the Democrats more often than the Republican Party, in which he was enrolled, always captured both party nominations.

Because of the voting history in this district, with highly geared union labor organizations, the Shelley victory was no surprise.

The latest unofficial State-wide figures, covering 85 percent of the precincts, were as follows on the leading issues:

	Yes	No
School bond issue	1,823,854	684,017
Daylight saving	1,353,777	1,106,025
Pension repeal	1,516,299	1,123,723

Aside from the proposition raising legislators' salaries to $300 a month and limiting the length of legislative sessions, others of the 12 propositions ratified by Californians delete or modernize antiquated and inoperative technical provisions of the State constitution.

With no State-wide offices at stake, the unusual election devoted only to legislative and local issues drew roughly 60 percent of the 4,568,447 qualified voters to the polls.

Beer Surplus May Set Off Price War

Milwaukee, Nov. 12 (U.P.).—A suds surplus may set off a price war on beer, according to Russell H. Hopkins, executive manager of the National Beer Wholesalers' Association.

He told the Wisconsin beer distributors' convention yesterday that the price of beer may drop because it is plentiful, and beer prices, especially over the bar, still are set at wartime peaks.

Bayer Aspirin Is Ready To Go To Work!

MAKE THIS TEST!
To see how fast it's ready to go to work, drop a Bayer Aspirin tablet in a glass of water and time its disintegrating speed. What happens in the glass, happens in your stomach.

Millions use Bayer Aspirin tablets to relieve ordinary headache, because they start disintegrating with astonishing speed . . . are actually ready to go to work in two seconds. And they know this is why Bayer Aspirin brings quick relief.

But important as fast relief is when you're in pain, there are also other reasons why Bayer Aspirin is the choice of millions.

First, it's remarkably effective. Second, it's wonderfully gentle. In fact, Bayer Aspirin's single active ingredient is so effective, doctors regularly prescribe it for pain relief . . . is so gentle to the system mothers give it even to small children on their doctors' advice.

So don't experiment with drugs that have not stood the test of time. Whenever you have a headache, do as millions do—use Bayer Aspirin for fast, dependable relief.

And when you buy, buy by name. Ask for genuine Bayer Aspirin.

NOW...BAYER ASPIRIN IN CHILDREN'S SIZE
New 2½ grain tablets (containing half the amount of regular size Bayer Aspirin tablets) provide proper children's dosage as prescribed by your doctor...and are made so you can break them in half when even smaller dosages are required. Restoration Draws Nearer for Ancient Ramsay House

THE OLD RAMSAY HOUSE STILL STANDS AT KING AND FAIRFAX STS.

Ordered Back to Jail

New Orleans, Nov. 13 (AP).—Two former members of the late Al Capone's Chicago gang were ordered back to prison today by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals.

The Appeals Court ruled that Louis (Little New York) Campagna and Charles (Cherry Nose) Gioe must finish serving their 10-year Federal prison terms.

Campagna has been reported living on his 800-acre farm near Fowler, Ind., and Gioe in Chicago.

Ruined Alexandria Structure Awaits Plans' Completion

A little more than 200 years ago, when wooden ships set sail on the Potomac from Belhaven, Va., with cargoes of tobacco for the Old World, a prosperous merchant named William Ramsay moved into a proud new house there.

It was from his fine house, one day in 1749, that Ramsay went forth to carry out an order of the Virginia House of Burgesses. One of several trustees, he was designated to help sell, lot by lot, a 60-acre tract of land hard by his home.

Thus did Belhaven become Alexandria. The town grew up around Ramsay's house. He became the first Lord Mayor and postmaster. George Washington, not yet in his twenties when he helped stake out the town, often visited Ramsay.

Ruin From Another Day

All that is history. But Ramsay House, oldest of Alexandria's old buildings, still stands at King and Fairfax sts. — gaunt with age, scarred by fire, tenanted only by rats, a ruin from another day when the young town was waxing well-to-do under British rule.

Whether the house will be restored is a question. Everybody seems to hope so, but a move that began some years back to get the job done has a long way yet to go.

Milton Grigg of Charlottesville, Va., architect, who has drawn plans for the restoration, figures it will cost only $25,000. Yet groups that have tried to raise the money have obtained only $6000.

Because the property is owned by Alexandria, the City Council has a contract with the Alexandria Historical Society saying that the house will be restored by September 1, 1950. The society is one of the groups pushing hardest to bring the old home back to its original state.

Solution Seen

Col. Everett A. Hellmuth, former city councilman and president of the society, thinks the solution of the problem has been found.

Various manufacturers of window frames, doors, doorways, and other house fittings have offered to build them free for Ramsay House.

This is a double boon, because the house must be torn down and rebuilt piece by piece—according to Hellmuth.

Once the architect has completed his measurements and the manufacturers have received the specifications, the project will move fast, Hellmuth believes. Drawing up of the specifications is almost finished, he reports.

And once people see the house taking shape, the contributions will begin adding up, quickly, Hellmuth believes.

Help for Project

To get the project as far along as it is has been the work of others besides the society and Grigg. The Alexandria Association has contributed the proceeds of garden tours; funds have come in also from the Daughters of the American Revolution and other organizations.

Hellmuth pictures Ramsay House fitted out exactly as it was in colonial times, to be used as a museum and for special occasions.

He also argues that it should serve as the office of Alexandria's mayor, not only because that was its role originally, but because the present mayor has no headquarters. The city does not provide him with an office.

Mrs. Robert M. Reese of Alexandria, the former Rebecca Ramsay, and a descendant of the first mayor, has many of the furnishings of the original house. She has William Ramsay's secretary, several oil paintings, and other items. She will be glad to put them back in the old house.

Recent History of House

"Nothing would please me more," she says. "My family and I would go a long way toward refurnishing it."

According to Mrs. Reese, the house stayed in the Ramsay family until 1848. Since then it has been many things—tobacco factory, antique shop, and, in 1932, a tavern.

Fire rendered the building useless in 1943. It has been unoccupied since.

Home Falls Fatal to 9

Nine persons died in accidental home falls in Washington last week.

Treated at hospitals for injuries suffered in home accidents were 84 District residents, according to the District Red Cross Accident Prevention Service's weekly report.

Those treated included a brother and sister, who ate a tube of rubbing ointment, a 3-year-old girl and 11-month-old baby, who ate lye, and a 22-month-old boy who ate 60 thyroid tablets.

A year-old boy was burned by hot coffee, and a little girl by kerosene poured on a fire. A woman broke an ankle when she fell from a second-floor window.

Home accident injuries have totaled 5375 so far this year as compared to 5266 at this time last year. Deaths to date have been 194 as compared to 224 for the same period last year, according to the report.

WASHINGTON: SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 13, 1949

U.S. Fanfare for Shah Also a Reminder to Soviet

By Ferdinand Kuhn
Post Reporter

WASHINGTON will put on its best bib and tucker this week to welcome the first Oriental monarch ever to visit American shores.

The visitor will be His Imperial Majesty Mohammed Riza Shah Pahlevi, Shahinshah of Iran—a title that suggests someone in a golden turban and a robe aflame with jewels.

The crowds along Pennsylvania ave. next Wednesday will find that the Shah neither looks nor acts like an Oriental potentate. They will see a modern man of 30, a little below medium height, with a wiry frame, a thin face, a sharp and prominent nose, and a manner that is almost too serious for one so young.

Unlike most crowned heads, this one is far from being a figurehead. He is one of the few rulers, Oriental or otherwise, who has stood up to every kind of Soviet intimidation, even though Soviet power has glared at him just across his country's northern border.

He and his government have been the targets of an intermittent Soviet war of nerves ever since the armistice in Europe. In 1946 his steadiness helped the United Nations to get Soviet troops out of Iran's northwest province of Azerbaijan. Later, the Shah suppressed the Soviet-controlled Tudeh Party that had threatened a Communist revolution in his capital.

Saved by Footwork

HE HAS FOUND it a serious business to be the Shah of Iran in these postwar years. Last winter a newspaper reporter fired five shots at him as he was entering the ancient University of Tehran for an anniversary celebration.

One bullet grazed his cheek, another tore the flesh in his side, and three others ripped harmlessly through his hat. He almost certainly would have been killed if he had not ducked, twisted and weaved like a trained boxer, which, in fact, he is.

He is not only a boxer, a tennis player and a skier but he flies his own four-engined plane, a plush-lined B-17 that he takes over some of the worst flying terrain on earth. He would be wholly in character if he asked to take over the controls of President Truman's plane, the Independence, as it flies him for the first time over the ocean and toward the New World.

Officially the Shah's visit is described as just a good-will mission and so, in a sense, it is. President Truman and the State Department want to show the young monarch that the United States respects him, and they also want him to see as much of the United States as he can.

His schedule has a heavy military emphasis, with visits to West Point and Annapolis and Fort Knox, Ky. For the Shah regards himself as a trained military man, and is actually as well as nominally commander in chief of the Iranian armed forces.

Lesson in Irrigation

BUT HIS VISIT will not be entirely military display or official ceremonies. Some imaginative schedule-maker also provided a two-day stopover in the fabulous Salt River Valley of Arizona, where the soil was as parched as in Iran until vision and effort irrigated it, and made it one of the richest vegetable and citrus growing areas on earth.

The Shah will also have a day at the Grand Canyon, another in Hollywood, and a whole week of skiing at Sun Valley, Idaho, before he flies home. And at the start of his visit he will see something brand new in his experience by watching the Georgetown-George Washington football game next Saturday.

Unless the Shah unbends a good deal under the influence of American ways, he will be a stiff and serious sightseer. He speaks a little English, but it will not be easy for Americans to pierce through his reserve. In his own country he is hedged about by endless formality in his public appearances. He feels he has to be, for he is a newcomer in the ranks of dynasties and kings, and he finds it useful to stand on royal dignity.

Mohammed Riza is only a second generation Shah. Royal blood, whatever it is worth, does not flow in his veins. His father, Riza Shah Pahlevi, was a burly cavalryman who seized power in the early 1920s, chased the last Shah of the weak Kadjar dynasty from his throne, wore the fabulous crown jewels at his coronation in 1926, and proceeded to make himself an imperial dictator.

Although Riza Pahlevi energized his backward country, he let it become a center of Nazi intrigue until, in 1941, Russian and British troops occupied the country and drove him into exile. He died in 1944 in South Africa.

Alien Policy Makers

HIS ELDEST SON, Mohammed Riza, became Shah at 21, with his country prostrate and his own influence negligible. His Parliament and government were rotten with graft. His people were more miserable than at any time since the Mongol invasions. His policies were determined largely by the Allied powers whose troops squatted, for good and necessary reasons, on Iranian soil.

Iran was almost unrecognizable as the country that had produced great literature, art and architecture, and had been the cultural leader of the Moslem world.

Thousands of American supply troops and engineers were in Iran soon after the Shah's accession, operating and guarding the twisting railway line from the Persian Gulf which was Russia's only dependable supply line from the outer world. At the peak period, in the winter of 1943-44, more than 30,000 Americans were stationed in the Shah's territory.

During the same period, President Roosevelt, Prime Minister Churchill and Marshal Stalin met at Tehran for the first of their wartime conferences. They took little notice of the young Shah at this time. The Iranian government was a cipher, although all three major allies had promised in a formal declaration to restore and preserve Iran's independence after the war.

Stalin, explaining that he was only a marshal and not the titular head of the Soviet state, observed the proprieties by going to call on the young Shah. The Shah, in turn, called on President Roosevelt. It was on this visit that Roosevelt said, in vague but friendly terms, that he wished the Shah could come to America some day.

President Truman renewed the invitation, and in more specific terms, early this year, hoping to have the Shah come to Washington in the spring. But the present visit really had its origins in those historic days when an American President was staying in the ancient and storied land of Persia.

Strategic Concept

NATURALLY, a visit like the Shah's is not arranged just for the fun of it. Both governments, the Iranian and the American, see political importance in it, and each government is preparing for the visit with great seriousness.

See IRAN, Page 3, Column 5.

Wisdom, Not So-Called 'Morality,' of A-Bombing Held Up as Our Guide

By Brig. Gen. Telford Taylor
General Taylor was United States chief prosecutor at the Nuernberg war crimes trials.

THE HORRORS of atomic warfare are as fully appreciated by the people of the United States as by others. The revulsion against poison gas after the First World War was as nothing compared to the fear inspired by "the bomb" today.

So it is the more noteworthy that, contrary to our experience in the case of gas, no substantial American demand for the outlawing of atomic weapons (short of full international control of atomic energy) has arisen. On the contrary, it has been generally assumed, without much protest, that in the event of war with the Soviet Union, we would resort to atomic bombing of Russian population without hesitation.

To a degree, this has been due to the unique military position which we have enjoyed since the war. We alone have used the bomb as a weapon of warfare. We alone—so we believed—knew how to forge the weapon, and we alone could stockpile these Jovian thunderbolts. Outlawing the bomb would deprive us of an inestimable military advantage, and would seem to carry with it condemnation of Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

This short period of illusory security has come to an end. We have passed through the eye of the hurricane and are again in rough seas. Since the recent Russian explosion, we all are painfully aware that, come another war, we may be getting it in the neck as well as dishing it out.

Simultaneously, profound issues among our military leaders, long latent, have become front-page news. Admirals Denfeld, Halsey, Ofstie and others have not gone so far as to declare use of the atom bomb criminal, in a strictly legal sense, but they have called it immoral. Admiral Ofstie, for example, described strategic bombing as "ruthless and barbaric" and declared that the "concept of indiscriminate attacks on nonmilitary targets undermines" the "standards of morality which have been a guiding force in this democracy since its inception."

Certainly, it is pardonable to suspect that the Navy's motives in raising the moral issue are not purely reformatory. No doubt more money, a supercarrier, and greater naval autonomy would rapidly quiet this sermonizing. But, as Oscar Wilde observed, "The fact that a man is poisoner is nothing against his prose," and the fact that the Navy's motives are mixed does not mean that the issue is not profoundly important. It lies at the roots of our national interest.

It also closely touches our national integrity. At Nuernberg, German war criminals of the most diverse hues—the fanatic S. S. General Ohlendorf, who admittedly ordered the cold-blooded slaughter of 80,000 Russian Jews, as well as the industrial magnates Alfried Krupp and Frederich Flick, in whose mines and factories many thousands of deportees were held at forced labor under appalling conditions — these men and others did not hesitate to charge that the murder of Jews and enslavement of workers were at least no greater crimes than the destruction of German and Japanese cities by Allied bombs, whether conventional or atomic. We will surely hear this argument again and again from the strange alliance of Communists and nationalist neo-Nazis now burgeoning in Germany and Russia.

Now, by curious coincidence, and for reasons at once selfish and patriotic, our own Navy has come out against so-called "strategic bombing." Most unfortunately, the challenge was not squarely or realistically met by either General Bradley or Secretary Symington in their testimony before the House Arms Services Committee. The latter declared that it is no worse "to stop a man at a lathe building a bomber to attack us" than "to stop a soldier." General Bradley observed that "it is obvious that workers live near factories, and that if you bomb the factories you may bomb the people."

The writer's admiration for General Bradley is deep and unshaken but, on this occasion, he has not displayed his customary frankness and acumen. To be sure, some strategic bombing (notably that carried out in Europe by our Eighth and Fifteenth Air Forces under Generals Spaatz, Doolittle and Twining) was "precision bombing," directed against specific industrial or communications targets, and in these operations the destruction of adjacent civilian life and property was incidental and unavoidable.

Quite distinct was the impact of the night raids on Germany carried out by the Royal Air Force, beginning in 1942, and of our own strategic air forces in the Pacific in 1945, beginning with the March 9 incendiary bomb raid on Tokio and culminating in the atomic devastation of Hiroshima and Nagasaki. These were not aimed specifically at the "man at the lathe"; he was only one of a great number of targets. No bombs missed their targets unless they fell outside populated areas. This type of strategic bombing is called "area bombing," and its object is to level the cities attacked and cause the maximum loss of civilian life and property. To blink at this fact is to arouse cynicism and derision abroad and spread confusion at home.

At least in its form presently known to the public, the atom bomb is not a precision weapon. It is an area weapon. No doubt, in the event of war, specific industrial targets would be singled out for attack, but high altitude bombing by intercontinental bombers using atom bombs would be basically "area bombing" of major population centers. Is that "criminal" or "immoral," as the Navy now argues?

1. The atom bomb itself poses no new question of principle. Conventional high explosive and incendiary bombs dropped on Germany caused about 300,000 deaths, over 1,000,000 casualties and rendered 7,500,000 persons homeless. Countless libraries, churches and other monuments of enlightened civilization were destroyed. The first incendiary raid on Tokyo produced some 185,000 casualties. It is scant comfort to the dead and injured of Hamburg, Kassel, Dresden and Tokyo that their agony antedated Alamogordo.

No doubt the atom bomb can put into the records even higher figures and will involve more horrible after effects, but the laws and customs of law have never proscribed bigger guns, heavier bombs or faster airplanes. It is the manner and occasion of the use of weapons, not their dimensions or explosive power, that raise questions of law and morals. The true issue is not the morality of the atom bomb but of "area bombing" of cities.

2. Morality in modern war does not derive from sentiment or chivalry. The customs of war can never effectively prohibit weapons or practices of substantial military value. If the letter of the law is otherwise, it will be amended by common practice in wartime. The laws of war are binding and effective only against practices which do not substantially promote military success, or the disadvantages of which, in the long run, outweigh the advantages.

Literally, the laws of war require that any surrendering combatant be taken prisoner, but this is rarely done in the heat of battle where the momentum of an advance would be lost, or when escorting prisoners to the rear involves serious danger to their captors. In the movies, the machinegunning of an enemy aviator, parachuting helplessly to earth, is despicable and cowardly, but in actual combat this problem is approached with the most cold-blooded practicality. British airmen who bailed out over England during the Battle of Britain were often attacked by German planes because they would fly again unless killed or disabled. But this rarely occurred over Europe, where they could be safely captured and interrogated. Allied practice was not radically different.

3. Ruthless and destructive military tactics are not necessarily effective tactics. It is as shortsighted and unrealistic to set aside humane considerations blindly or unthinkingly as it is to pursue a false sentimentality. The military advantages of slaughtering the enemy to the last man, and giving no quarter, even when prisoners can safely be taken, are slight. At the same time, a valuable source of intelligence would be dried up and one's own troops brutalized by being turned into butchers of helpless, defenseless men.

'Struggle' Is the Word for Yugoslavia

By Frank Gervasi.
Post Reporter

BELGRADE, Nov. 12.—The only neon sign allowed to burn of nights in this depressing Balkan capital is the one atop the modernistic skyscraper home of the Yugoslav Communist Party's official newspaper. It spells out the word "Borba," meaning struggle.

The paper could not have been more appropriately named. Struggle is the keynote of Yugoslav existence. The people work harder for their daily bread and for less of it than those of any western nation.

The average Yugoslav is up well before dawn and at work by 7. He quits, officially, at 2 in the afternoon. The early quitting hour was set to give him leisure in which to enjoy the beautiful things of life—opera, ballet, movies, books.

Actually, he labors far into the night, six days a week. He works overtime at his regular job, at extra jobs to eke out a living, or for the state, for free, in the "volunteer" Radna Brigada, or workers' brigades.

Girls, boys, men and women may be called upon by the state for work on the roads, on public works, to clear away snow in winter. They may give as much as two months' work out of every year to the state.

Beef for Bigwigs

THIS tremendous outpouring of energy has failed to produce the perfect Marxist state, the one in which there would be time to enjoy opera and ballet. Poverty still lies over the land like a repulsive old blanket.

In the big cities, the shops are empty or have only the shoddiest of wares. In the towns and villages, the people are unable to obtain the shoes, clothing, sugar or other necessities and luxuries "guaranteed" them by their ration coupons.

Butter, beef, rice and milk are for high officials, army officers and the foreign correspondents, technicians and homeless diplomats who crowd the dining room of the Hotel Majestic or the Two Fishermen, the only restaurants in Belgrade which have not been converted into workers' messes.

The opera and ballet are for the same army elite, for the Udarnik superworkers, the intelligentsia, the party bigwigs, for—in short—the new upper classes of this supposedly classless society.

But it would be inaccurate and dangerous to infer from communism's obvious oppressions and inequities that the system does not work or that the people who live under it do not like it and are restively awaiting a day of liberation.

No one can travel nearly 1000 miles about this country—as I have done—and see rebuilt bridges, hundreds of miles of relaid trackage, new concrete highways, great hydroelectric installations, heavy machinery factories, whole new villages and towns and a generally happy, enthusiastic people without admitting that communism has worked here far better than he had imagined.

Bill Smith, milling machine hand in a Detroit automobile factory, would not like the regimented existence that is the lot of 16 million Yugoslavs. He has a good job, perhaps even good enough to enable him to keep up the payments on a small house, own a car and take a two or three-week holiday each year.

Bill Smith belongs to a union of his own choice, reads what papers he pleases and can speak his mind freely on any subject. He can go to church or not, as his conscience dictates. His son may grow up to be President; his daughter can become a concert singer if she has the talent and the energy.

Bill Smith's Yugoslav counterpart, Mirko Popovitch, works at Jeleznek, the new heavy machinery plant near Belgrade. He earns, by Yugoslav standards, good wages—about 500 dinars or $100 a month. The sum is not enough to more than feed, clothe and house the family, so Mrs. Popovitch works, too, and so do the children, if they are over 13 or 14. Altogether, they have about $200 a month.

Rent Kept Low

THEY do not own a home and never will, nor do they own a car—not even a bicycle. They live in one of the model housing developments near the factory. They have two rooms, a bathroom with a tub, a kitchen with an electric stove—power is cheap—and running water. They pay their landlord, the state or the local workers' cooperative, low rent, never more than 10 or 15 percent of their earnings.

Mirko Popovitch can only belong to the state's single union, to which all of the country's 1,300,000 workers—as distinct from farmers—belong. He must work where and when the employer, the state, needs him. He can earn more money only if he works overtime, or takes on an extra job. He can keep his job only if he can keep up the pace predetermined by the state planners. If he falls behind, he is first warned, then fined, then demoted to a lower category of worker who receives less pay.

But are Mirko and his folks restive and unhappy? Not noticeably. I had sufficient opportunity to talk with Yugoslavia's Mirko Popovitches, alone and through interpreters, to be satisfied that they do not feel ill-used. They are less abused, by and large, than they were under the corrupt, oppressive monarchist regime which the Tito revolution swept out of existence.

Subsidized Vacations

MIRKO and his family are much better off than they ever were. They have, perhaps, a little less to eat. According to the statistics, food was cheaper and more plentiful in Yugoslavia before the war than it is now. But the people get enough to struggle along on, and whenever Mirko works enough overtime there is money for extra meat, a bit of honey or marmalade, maybe even for a cotton dress for Mrs. Popovitch.

The Popovitches certainly have a better home than they had before. Hundreds of thousands of Mirko Popovitches have been siphoned into the cities from remote mountain areas where the rocky soil yielded less than a bare existence and where "home" was a one-room, stick-and-mud hut with an earthen floor and a thatched roof. Goatherds and shepherds have learned trades under communism and have learned to read and write.

The Mirko Popovitches, too, have yearly vacations. Mirko and his family may go to any hotel, any spa, any of the innumerable inns and resorts that dot the Dalmatian

Young men and women march to work on Yugoslavia's "Brotherhood of Unity" highway between Belgrade and Zagreb. They worked without pay on the project through their summer vacations to help meet Marshal Tito's deadline for its completion. Yugoslavs of all employable ages give up to two months' work a year to the state.

'Some of My Best Friends Are Being Called Spies'

By Wallace Carroll

Reprinted from the Winston-Salem (N. C.) Journal and Sentinel, of which Mr. Carroll is executive news editor.

THERE is no use trying to hide it any longer. The fact is that some of my best friends are spies. Or, at least, some of my best friends are being called spies.

Take Noel Field as an example. At this moment my old friend Noel seems to be the leading candidate for "Spy of the Year." First he was denounced before the Un-American Activities Committee as a tool of the Russians. And now the Russians and all their satellites are calling him a spy for the dirty American imperialists.

Good old Noel! If the Russians haven't caught him, he must be wondering what it's all about.

I met Noel Field for the first time in 1936 when he joined the staff of the League of Nations in Geneva.

Noel was a Quaker. He not only believed in peace, but he believed that he, Noel Field, had to do something about peace. So, against the advice of his friends, he gave up his safe and secure job in the State Department and joined the League in order to work on the heart-breaking problem of disarmament.

You couldn't help liking Noel. He was a big but gentle fellow, ruddy-skinned, black-haired and always wide-eyed with wonder about what he had learned that day. His parents were American, but he had been raised in German Switzerland, and he had all the solid virtues of the Swiss—honesty, patience and thrift.

Adopted War Orphan

WHEN the civil war in Spain was nearing its end, Noel went to the Republican side on a mission from the League. Somewhere in a battered town, he found a girl of 12 or so, hungry, frightened and bewildered. Her father, a German officer, had been killed fighting for the Republicans. Noel took her home to Geneva, and he and his wife, a German by birth, raised her as their daughter.

I lost track of Noel when the big war started. Although the League closed down and he lost his job, he chose to stay in Geneva. Only when the war was over did I learn what had happened to him.

One day in 1939 he was called on the telephone by an official of the American Legation in Bern, the Swiss capital.

"Do you know anything about Unitarians?" the official asked.

"All I know," said Noel, "is that they don't believe in the Trinity."

That call led to a job—a job as head of a mission financed by American Unitarians to help the Spanish Republican refugees in France.

There were tens of thousands of these refugees in filthy, miserable camps not far from the borders of Franco Spain. Noel Field went to work among them.

Then, when the Germans overran the northern half of France in 1940, they drove swarms of Jews, Alsatians and other refugees before them into the southern half. He set up camps for them, too, and he not only fed them but tried to put them to useful work so they would keep their pride and self-respect.

Underground Railway

SOON HITLER and his secret police began to point a finger at certain men and women in these camps and demand that the French government at Vichy give them up. Noel saw the cattle cars arrive to take these people off to the torture chambers and the crematoriums in Germany.

So he did what one man could. With the help of brave men and women among the French and Swiss, he set up his own underground railway to smuggle those in danger to safety in Switzerland. No one will ever know how many people Noel Field saved from the gas chamber and the crematorium.

One night in 1944, after the Germans had occupied all of France, he was driving back to Switzerland with two Jews who had been marked for execution. Close behind him came the German secret police, and suddenly bullets began to spatter around his car.

Noel put his foot down on the accelerator. Across the dark countryside and through the little stone villages they raced, the quarry and the hunters. As they came to the frontier, the guards on the French and German side stepped out to halt the car. Noel swung around them and dashed on. Over on the Swiss side a wooden barrier blocked the road. He crashed through it. He and his passengers were safe.

Old Man at 41

WHEN the war was over, you might have said that Noel was an old man. He was then about 41, but his hair was white, most of his teeth were gone, he was almost blind in one eye and the other eye was failing, too.

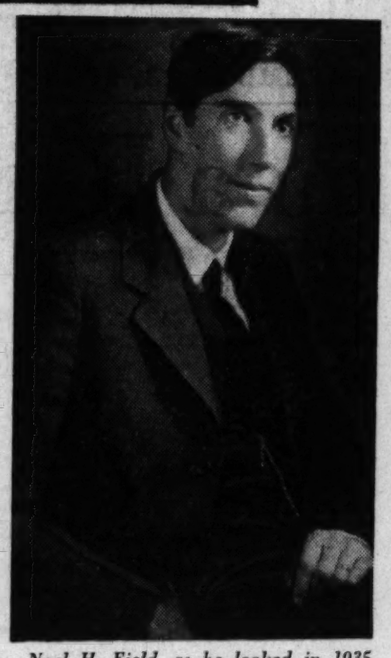
Reluctantly, perhaps, he went into a sanitarium. Slowly his health came back and he saved one eye. Then he went back to work for the Unitarians among the Spanish refugees, and he organized a fund-raising committee in which Pablo Casals, the great Spanish cellist, and Pablo Picasso, the Franco-Spanish artist, joined him.

But on October 14, 1948, the House Committee on Un-American Activities released secret testimony by Whittaker Chambers, the former Communist courier who had set off an inquiry into Communist penetration of Government offices.

Chambers said that Noel Field, while serving in the State Department in the 1930s, was a member of a Communist "apparatus." Field, he said, knew Alger Hiss, another Quaker and State Department official, though Field and Hiss, he asserted, were in different Communist units.

I found Chambers' story hard to believe, and I talked to many of Noel's old friends and associates in the State Department. Some of them thought that he might have had a warm feeling for the Russians in the prewar period when they appeared to be on the side of the angels, but none of them could be persuaded that he ever had been capable of a devious or disloyal act.

Still, the Unitarians who had employed Noel were disturbed, and they sent him word that they could no longer use him.



Noel H. Field, as he looked in 1935 when he was appointed by Secretary of State Hull as technical assistant to the United States delegation at the London Naval Arms Conference. Field worked for the State Department's Division of Western European Affairs at the time.

A Vanished Family

THAT was the last I heard of him until the Hungarian spy trials several weeks ago. Then, in the indictment which charged eight Hungarian Communist leaders with conspiring against Hungary on behalf of the United States, Noel Field was accused of being an American "imperialist spy" at work behind the Iron Curtain.

Now it develops that he has been missing since June, when he sent word from Prague that he was going to Hungary.

His brother, Herman Field, is also missing. He was last seen in Warsaw August 22.

And, as I write this, a report comes in that Noel's wife, Herta, disappeared in Prague August 23.

Among Noel's friends in Washington there is the fear that the three Fields are being held by the Soviet secret police. These friends can only guess at Noel's recent activities, but they believe that when Stalin's heavy hand fell on eastern Europe, Noel set out again to save men who would otherwise have to face the torture chamber and the concentration camp.

And that is what I believe, too. For if I know Noel Field, he would like to be doing just that till the day he dies.

Boss Jim Curley Yields a Throne With an Epigram

By Thomas Winship

Post Reporter

"NO ONE did more for England than Churchill," he said after passing out cigars. "Certainly no one did more for Ireland than Eamon de Valera. Yet both of them were similarly retired. So it seems I am in very excellent company."

As an afterthought, he referred to great political figures of American cities and States, such as Hague of New Jersey, who are now being turned out to pasture.

With that characteristic flourish, 75-year-old Mayor James Michael Curley of Boston passed off defeat last Tuesday as the last old-time political autocrat on the American political scene.

Curley entered public life as boss of south Boston's Ward 17 forty-nine years ago.

In his exit, "Honest Jim" was in illustrious company.

Jersey City's former Mayor, "I Am the Law" Frank Hague, also was toppled from his political throne in the Tuesday elections by the defeat of his protege, Elmer H. Wene, in the gubernatorial race at the hands of Gov. Alfred E. Driscoll.

Curley was the last to leave city hall. His contemporaries—Pendergast of Kansas City, Kelly of Chicago and Ed Crump of Memphis—went down with the disintegration of their machines. But James Michael's political power lay more in his personal magnetism, his charm and his quotation-studded speeches.

He used to regularly read Shakespeare and the other great writers to his children. As Governor he once delivered a half-hour welcoming address in Latin at a Harvard commencement.

What happened then to the former Congressman, Governor and Democratic National Committeeman when he asked the people for a fourth term as mayor of Boston?

Why was the glamorous Jim trimmed by the unglamorous John B. Hynes, city clerk for 29 years, and a man who was no match for Curley as a campaigner?

Breaks Against Him

POLITICAL bossism and the Curley record were the key issues, but Back Bay old timers hasten to add that Curley just didn't have the breaks in the campaign.

This was his first appeal to the voters since his conviction in District Court here in 1947 for mail fraud. Hynes was then appointed "temporary mayor" while Curley served his five months in jail.

The Hynes camp rode hard against the idea of returning a former convict to city hall. "Redeem Boston in the eyes of America," the Hynes literature read.

Then, too, Curley had to face up to a $56.80 tax rate in Boston. He had gone into office with a pledge of a $35 rate.

The mayor who built more subway tunnels, roads, hospitals and other public improvements, didn't speak out for more housing and other municipal "reforms" with his old vigor, politicians say.

The thunderous five-man race against Curley became very hot, then settled down to a Curley-Hynes tussle.

Republicans a Help

AND strong sentiment among State Republican leaders also contributed heavily to the Hynes cause. Curley has been a GOP road block for years.

On election day, Hynes got another unexpected assist. McDonough, a minor candidate, ran a front page ad in the Boston Post intimating he had the backing of Secretary of Labor Maurice Tobin, himself a former Boston mayor.

The Hynes people promptly secured a denial from Tobin. So Boston voters went to the polls with every paper headlining the Tobin-for-Hynes announcement. One of the big question marks throughout the campaign had been, "Where does Tobin stand?"

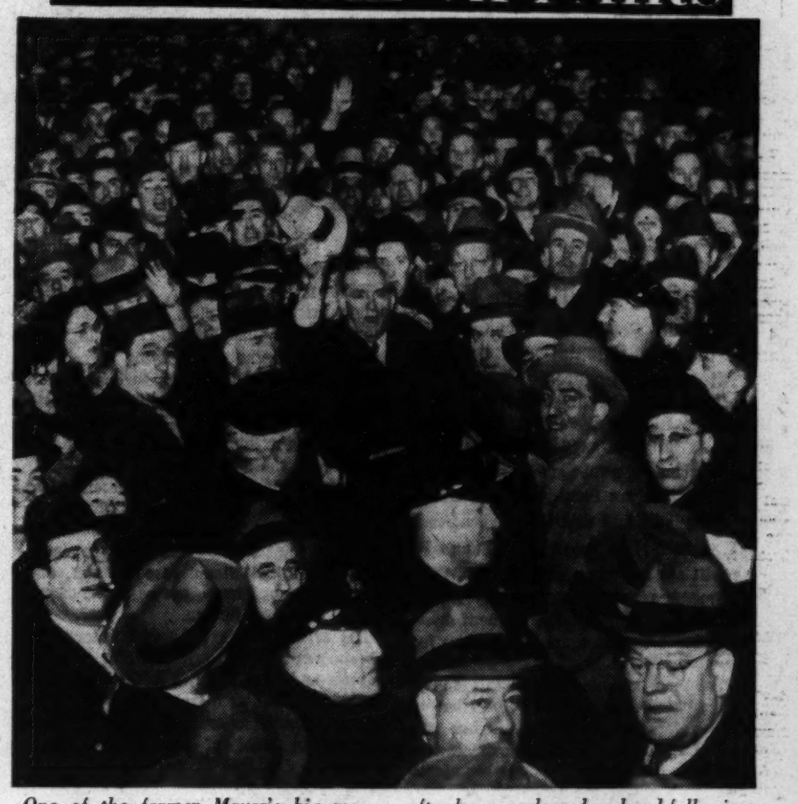
Hynes carried the city with a margin of 12,000 in a center which always polls less than 300,000 votes.

The lone wolf in politics is now vacationing with his wife at Niagara Falls, but his friends warn against writing the Curley "influence" completely off the books.

"Remember he received 126,000 votes last Tuesday," they remind you. "They were all Democratic votes and they were all personal votes. He still holds the commanding Democratic voting block in Democratic Boston."

But, regardless of what the future holds, Boston and Jersey City were apparently ready for new faces.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS



One of the former Mayor's big moments. Curley (center with raised hat) salutes the crowd of 5000 which welcomed him back to Boston in 1946 after he was released on bond following his sentencing here on mail fraud charges. "Boston loves you, Curley!" yelled his admirers

'Minimum Understanding' Possible

New Overtures From USSR

By Edwin D. Gritz

Post Reporter

BEHIND the welter of bombast which has marked Soviet utterances recently is an obviously increasing awareness in the USSR that coexistence with capitalist nations is vital for the time being to avoid coextinction.

Just how to accept the Soviet Union's latest emphasis on the possibility of coexistence is still generally undetermined. Yet the importance of these new calls for cooperation is undenied, particularly since the principle of coexistence turned out to be a major theme in last week's celebrations of the Russian Revolution's thirty-second anniversary.

One approach to any understanding of the Kremlin's position today is provided in a study of Soviet principles and practices by Dr. Julian Towster, former chief of a political research and analysis section in the State Department, who is now engaged in research here for the Russian Institute of Columbia University.

Dr. Towster first points out that a complete understanding with the Soviet Union is inconceivable now since the abiding Soviet principle of "maximum security" calls for victory of world communism. Soviet leaders, he asserts, still cling to the belief that a communist victory is inevitable through the self-destruction of capitalism by economic crises and wars.

In view of all this, Dr. Towster indicates that only a "minimum understanding" with Russia is possible at this time—an understanding which would bring about progressive settlement of various practical questions, cut down mutual recriminations and revive economic relations.

Both Juggling Scales

AT the present time, however, both the USSR and the West are striving to enhance their positions in the balance of power. The Soviet Union is pushing communism everywhere, meanwhile believing that crises and conflicts among the Western nations may yet work out to the advantage of world communism.

The West, on the other hand, is seeking greater equilibrium of power in relation to the Soviet Union, believing that stabilized conditions throughout the world will induce Russia to seek genuine compromise.

This political impasse, according to Dr. Towster, will sooner or later teach the Russians—if it has not already done so—something about the "growing strength, effectiveness and capacity for social justice of the non-Soviet world and cut the ground from under the paper panaceas of the USSR."

"Already developments of the past few years have indicated that Soviet leaders have underestimated the strength of nationalism in the world, including the Communist world, and that communism does not succeed too well in countries which are not contiguous upon the USSR."

Dr. Towster postulates two outstanding reasons why the Soviet Union may prefer peace to war for some time to come. One is the "realistic acceptance of coexistence in preference to coextinction." The other is atomic energy.

Atomic energy has not only become a military comfort to the Soviet Union but also "an open sesame" to abundance which Soviet leaders long ago promised under communism but have never been able to produce.

Decades of Building

DR. TOWSTER also calls attention to the fact that the Bolsheviks have always relied on the "force of example" theory—that is, success of socialism in one country. Now, with atomic energy, they will strive to prove that high production in every field is the fruit of socialism.

In this respect, Dr. Towster points out, "Soviet leaders still fanatically believe their social order and their economic system are far better able to make use of atomic energy than the non-Soviet system . . . and only through Soviet efforts can man reach great heights of achievement with the aid of these new discoveries."

To "prove" all this will in itself take many years, probably decades—decades of enforced peace.

In the meantime, of course, the Western world will have the opportunity to use "its advanced technology, its progressive social concepts, and its own atomic energy to build a house of strength and justice—thus diminishing any possibility for discontented fifth columns in its midst and invalidating communism . . ."

Under such conditions of peace, asserts Dr. Towster, many aspects of Bolshevism may well become dead letters, just as, historically, every dogma has some articles of faith which become lost or forgotten through disuse and neglect.

coast and the rolling hill country of Slovenia and Croatia. The state gives him three weeks to one month off each year, and cut rates on the railroads and at the resorts.

If Mirko has managed to save anything from his earnings, he can swank it at the Park Hotel, in Split, where the Roman aristocracy and rich tourists from all over the world used to stay. Or he can afford to go to Dubrovnik, one of the most beautiful resorts on the Adriatic.

If Mirko is a Udarnik, or "shock worker," he can usually afford anything. He earns up to 25,000 dinars a month, about $500, two or three times the pay of a highly placed government employe, and four or five times the salary of his own superior, the engineer who runs the factory. This is every bit as competitive a society—witness the Stakhanovite Udarnik's special privileges in wages and coupons for scarce consumer goods and foods—as any capitalist one.

Mirko's more humble colleagues, the Radniks, have privileges enough, however, to keep them content. The state pays their doctor and dentist bills, foots the maternity expenses and takes care of them when they become too sick to work. The state even pays Mirko for having children—175 dinars, or $3.50 a month for each child.

Myth of Freedom

OF FREEDOMS so dear to Bill Smith of Detroit, Mirko has virtually none. But the western critic should remember that Mirko and his like, in most of Eastern and Balkan Europe, never enjoyed individual freedoms of a kind and a degree enjoyed in the West.

Mirko dares not question the omniscience of the state. His membership in any church—Catholic, Orthodox or Mohammedan—while not denied him by law, is definitely frowned upon as "unprogressive" behavior symptomatic of bourgeois tendencies. The churches are all in need of repairs and are either poorly attended or closed altogether. The many roadside shrines are neglected or violated.

Mirko reads propaganda, but one of the most interesting things about him is that he takes out of it what he wants or can believe and rejects the rest.

Americans should face the fact that whatever help they give Yugoslavia will be used to advance the cause of Marxism within the country. The Yugoslavia of some indefinite tomorrow may liberalize its political system, but it is unlikely that it will alter its economic machinery. The loans from the Export-Import Bank, the United States Government cotton loans, all financial aid will go to stoke the furnaces of socialism.

Whatever money is lent to Yugoslavia, furthermore, will serve to strengthen the regime in power. It will enable the state factories to produce more consumer goods and prove to Mirko Popovitch that socialism really works. To the degree that socialism is successful here, it will inspire socialists in the rest of Europe—France and Italy especially—particularly in view of the fact that Tito has shown that it is possible to be a good socialist and be independent of the Kremlin simultaneously.

American help to Yugoslavia, however, will have been well invested if it succeeds in keeping Tito in power that he may resist the Kremlin's efforts to swallow up this small country in its Soviet Empire.

Luxury Saps Fervor Of Tokyo 'Scapanese'

By Robert P. Martin

TOKYO (ONA).—Life in the American "colony" in occupied Japan proceeds at a smooth pace now, compared to the restless days of "experiment" when idealists, and men who won the war, were hoping to reweave the entire fabric of Japanese society.

During the first two years of the occupation, Americans talked about their progress in reforming Japan. Their arguments were constructed around such diverse subjects as the emancipation of women, the rising "democratic" labor movement, education reforms and the new "freedoms" which the Japanese were just learning how to use.

Now the Americans talk about overseas markets for the Japanese, the possibility of a yen devaluation and Washington's plans to "depurge" a large segment of the businessmen and industrialists who supported Japan's aggressive wars.

Zeal Undermined

THIS CHANGE can be attributed partially to the shift in objectives of the occupation: recovery rather than reform is now the watchword. Of some importance, however, is the fact that Americans grew tired of fighting for ideals, and they suddenly discovered that life in Japan can be extremely pleasant. Spacious apartments and houses, servants to do the work, plenty of leisure time and vast facilities for play, have helped to undermine the incentive, or missionary zeal, of many Americans.

Occupation officials are derisively called "Scapanese," a word of obvious derivation which the more thoughtful Americans resent. "Scapanese" implies that one is neither American nor Japanese, but a combination of both. A "Scapanese" has the power, and enjoys the luxury, of a conqueror but his aims have been twisted and confused.

The average "Scapanese" no longer believes that he has a hand in destiny. As one remarked: "Once I worked with the feeling that part of Japan's future rested on my efforts. Now I work crossword puzzles."

Some "Scapanese" still work long and hard, especially those on Gen. Douglas MacArthur's personal staff and those dealing with economic and trade policies. These are the fields where the occupation is relinquishing the fewest controls. But to a majority of the occupation officials, the high point of each day is the "coffee session" with friends and coworkers.

Housing by Rank

LIVING is plush for the several thousand civilians employed by the occupation. Married officials get housing, the quality depending on their rank. Unmarried officials are billeted in special hotels, the top rank in the swank Imperial Hotel, medium rank in the Dai Ichi and the others occupying less spacious quarters in smaller hotels.

Special movies, clubs and swimming pools are provided for "Scapanese." They can spend their weekends in comfortable mountain or seashore resorts. An Army meal costs 40 cents, and a case of Scotch $30. Most of the luxuries available in the United States can be purchased in Japan at prices somewhat lower than those at home.

"Scapanese" who have houses, apartments or quarters in the Army housing areas, pay, on the average, $50 a month for their completely furnished accommodations, and get water, electricity, telephone and from one to three servants. The Japanese government foots the bill.

Truman Has New 'Mandate,' But Same Old Congress

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

LEGISLATIVELY speaking, what can you do with a refurbished "mandate"?

Ever since Messrs. Truman and Lehman teamed up to hand Congress another one, hot off the voting machines, that question has troubled legislative leaders.

Except perhaps in the first Roosevelt honeymoon, no legislative program of record has ever been "mandated" through Congress. Unless backed up by clear voting majorities in both Houses, State and local election victories have seldom been more than good talking points.

In a congressional election year, they will give the Truman program a psychological boost. Legislators, with the hot breath of the voters on their necks, scare easily, pay more heed to the popular will.

But it would take a truly frightened Congress, and one that sits right through until next election eve, to clear the unenacted bulk of Truman measures.

Mandate or no mandate, it will never take it all, if past performances are any criteria.

"Safe" majorities on the more controversial Truman points are likely to prove just about as hard to get in the second session of the Eighty-first Congress as they were in the first. In effect, Mr. Truman recognized this when he predicted merely that Congress will pass "a good deal more" of his program next year.

The Old Status Quo

LEAVING psychology and morale-boosting out of it, legislative arithmetic of Tuesday's elections is simply this: One brand new Senate seat picked up by the Democrats in New York, plus one Democratic House seat clipped from Republicans in California.

Actually, there will be no net Democratic seat gain in the Senate or House whatever. Interim shifts, due to resignations, deaths and appointments, will leave the Senate party line division right where it was when the new Congress first met last January.

That 54-to-42 Senate margin did manage to deliver a moderate number of Truman measures, and probably will again. If it does, the Administration can chiefly thank not the 1948 and 1949 "mandates," but Republican mavericks whose votes partially offset Southern Democratic defections.

The House, too, when one vacancy is filled, is likely to lead off the new session with the same party line-up with which it opened the last—263 Democrats and 1 American-Labor to 171 Republicans.

That's because Tuesday's single Democratic gain in California's Fifth District merely catches up with an earlier Republican pick-up of a seat in Pennsylvania's Twenty-sixth District.

Despite Southern bolts on some "Fair Deal" measures, it is still a pretty comfortable House Democratic majority and more likely than the Senate to respond to the new so-called "mandate."

The Hard Part Remains

THE difficulty of delivering remaining key points in the Truman domestic program takes on a new sharpness when you look at the points.

The last session, despite its clean record on foreign measures and surprising start on the "Fair Deal" itself, postponed final action on nearly all of the toughies.

Take the Administration's 1948 pledge to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act, a pledge renewed by Herbert Lehman. It brought organized labor rushing to his support, and certainly is a part of that new "mandate."

To deliver that one, the Senate would have to completely reverse its action last session approving a new version literally written by the original author, Senator Robert A. Taft.

And the House, having recommitted the original attempt at repeal, will have to get a new bill out of committee, something it hasn't been able to do yet. By the time it does, and settles with the Senate in conference, if in fact it attempts the feat, the President is still more than likely to get a bill he must veto.

Hardest pledge of all to fulfill in this Congress will be the President's civil rights pledge. The pledge was reaffirmed by former Governor Lehman and must be considered another part of the mandate.

Senate Democratic leaders have already scheduled an initial civil rights test on an FEPC bill. The legislation will come up in the Senate in January, probably right after a rugged fight to repeal the Federal oleomargarine tax.

Southern Democrats will open their familiar filibuster, and leaders have only one weapon to force a vote, an ineffectual cloture rule. The new rule, adopted by a coalition of Republicans and Southern Democrats last session, requires a "constitutional" two-thirds vote to break a filibuster.

That means at least 64 Senators will have to vote to shut off debate. Since many Republicans are as lukewarm as Southern Democrats toward FEPC, it will take a "miracle" indeed to deliver those 64 votes.

Virginia Vote a Prod

STANDING a better chance of enactment is another civil rights measure, the long-pending Federal antipoll-tax bill. On Tuesday two States, Virginia and Texas, rejected amendments modifying their own poll tax laws. The Southern argument in the past has been that the few remaining poll tax States would get rid of the voting restriction themselves. The failure of two such States to do so will put new steam behind the Federal bill.

Among the almost-impossible-to-move measures involved in that "mandate" is the Administration's compulsory health insurance measure, under fire from most medicos as "socialized medicine."

Lehman said he was against "socialized medicine" as such, but did favor strengthening of voluntary plans and a sort of "partnership" with the medical profession to provide low-cost medical care for all. Mr. Truman's pledge goes farther. But his bill hasn't budged out of committee and may not even get on the "must" list.

Federal aid to education was near the heart center of the 1948 Truman "mandate" and was high upon Lehman's list of pledges. But Senator-elect Lehman indorsed a school-aid bill which the Senate has already passed. The difficulty is now in the House, on the entirely different Barden bill, involved in a still heated religious controversy. Until the religious kinks are ironed out, it, too, faces a rocky road.

These are fair samples of some "Fair Deal" measures that may not yield easily to any "mandate."

Bad Time for Taxes

THERE are many, however, that will certainly move, notably the House-passed Social Security expansion bill. Both candidates in the New York election favored that one, and a somewhat reluctant Senate Finance Committee will go to work on it when Congress convenes.

With Mr. Truman reporting a 5½-billion-dollar deficit, Congress is likely to look askance at any new programs involving heavy expenditures. Nor can it be expected to rush in and cheer President Truman's call for more taxes in an election year to pay the costs.

John Foster Dulles may have lost his Senate seat in the New York fracas, but he themed in defeat the arguments Republicans in Congress will continue to make against "the welfare state." Dulles stressed the "cost" of the new programs. Again, mandate or no mandate, Republicans and conservative Democrats in Congress will continue to do the same.

But the "Fair Deal" generally, without the twists and turns that involve legislative gimmicks, will fare better in Congress because of last Tuesday's elections.

In only one field is the President's hand obviously weakened by what happened in New York—bipartisan foreign policy. That has been the mainstay of the near perfect congressional record on international measures in the past.

Lehman is no less an advocate of those measures than Dulles, but in the foreign field, at least, it is Republican, not Democratic, strength the Administration needs.

Mediator Is Ailing

IN THE past, Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg (R., Mich.) has been more than able to cope with the isolationist-tinged leadership of his party. Making just enough concessions in key foreign bills to assure preponderant Senate support, Vandenberg has matched wits with Senators Taft and Wherry, and won.

Vandenberg is now convalescing from a serious operation. At least at the start of the new session, few expect him to be able to exert the tremendous physical energy required of his role.

Further, he has announced his intention to retire from the Senate at the close of his present term, expiring in 1952.

Dulles and Vandenberg are of like minds internationally, and the New York Republican was regarded as his logical successor as Senate champion of a truly bipartisan foreign policy. Senate speculation now is that Vandenberg's mantle will probably fall on a much younger man, Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, jr. (R., Mass.), junior minority member of the Foreign Relations Committee.

Ironically, young Lodge is grandson of the man who led the successful Senate fight against Woodrow Wilson's League of Nations. In contrast, the third generation Lodge has played a supporting role to Vandenberg in nearly every recent foreign affairs battle.

Cartoonist Dowling of the New York Herald Tribune sees Lehman essaying Dulles foreign policy activities in the Senate. Actually, the GOP leadership in that field may pass to young Senator Lodge when Vandenberg retires

Atom Bombing 'Legalized' by Practice

The Germans reaped immediate military advantages from their callous violation of Belgian and Dutch neutrality that seemed to them decisively important for the conduct of the war against France and England, but, in the long run, these and similar acts raised the whole world against them, just as was foreseen by the German General Leeb in a letter to the German high command written in October, 1939. The records of the German occupation of Yugoslavia, Greece and other countries conclusively demonstrate the enormous harm they did their own cause by unimaginative, inflexible punitive policies.

4. The absolute nature of morality is a question for philosophers. Perhaps among individuals it transcends mere wisdom and "taking the long view" on matters of personal interest. But nations do not have parents, lovers, wives or children, and do not lay down their lives for their friends.

International morality is based, and can develop, only on a hard foundation of national self-interest. But that means an enlightened self-interest, for the relations between nations are growing wonderfully intricate and intimate even when they are at odds with one another, and, at the same time, man's capacity for race suicide has increased beyond all prior imaginings. That is precisely why we have witnessed at Nuernberg, Strasbourg, Lake Success and elsewhere, a general campaign for the development and application of international law to enforce minimum standards of enlightened self-interest by punishing transgressors.

Began With Britain

IN THE recent war, area bombing was not resorted to until precision bombing had failed. The early German raids on Warsaw, Rotterdam and Belgrade were ruthless enough, but they were not area bombing or even strategic bombing—they were tactical raids intended to expedite the capture of those cities by approaching ground forces. The Luftwaffe's plan of campaign at the outset of the Battle of Britain was intended as precision bombing of military targets. But when its losses mounted, day raids were abandoned, and the night attacks on London initiated true large-scale area bombing.

A year later, convinced of the impossibility of precision bombing under conditions then prevailing, the RAF took the same road. The prohibitions in the Hague conventions against the bombardment of undefended towns and buildings, and against the unnecessary destruction of cultural buildings and monuments, were set aside by the common practice of both belligerents. So far as I know, no one was charged with their violation in any of the war crimes trials.

Regrettably, but inevitably in the light of what has taken place, these provisions must be regarded as a dead letter. Insofar as the Navy's recent contentions suggest the contrary, they are utterly unrealistic and meretricious. Area bombing is not proscribed by the prevailing laws and customs of war and, until those laws and customs are changed by treaty or common observance, there will be no basis for calling it "criminal."

But this is the beginning, not the end, of the problem. That area bombing is not criminal does not prove that it is either wise or "moral" in the broad sense. Whether or not we should resort to it, in the event of war, can hardly be decided in the abstract. Perhaps we will be ambushed by a surprise atomic blitz of our major cities, and thus find ourselves locked in a struggle to the death with an implacable assailant.

One can hardly disagree with General Bradley's assertion that, in such an event, "the American people may feel that strategic bombing is both militarily and morally justified." It is beyond question, I believe, that we must have the B-36 or its improved equivalent, atomic weapons and well developed strategic air power, and that we might well resort to area bombing should we find ourselves in such a desperate predicament.

A Shrewder Way

THE DIFFICULTY is that we may never find ourselves in this particular predicament, but in others far more puzzling, if not so desperate. Intercontinental strategic warfare is the most complicated and technically difficult type of war. It will be decades before Russian technical and industrial resources can match our own. One may well doubt that there is much danger, in the foreseeable future, that the Russians will initiate this terrible game by dropping the first bomb.

This does not mean that the Russians will not resort to war, in one form or another. Yugoslavia, Germany, China—in these and other "borderlands" the seeds of war are nearest to sprouting. And if the Russians bring war upon the world, it will be both easy and shrewd for them to put us to the difficult choice of whether or not to drop the first bomb. That is where and when the moral issue is most likely to arise. And that is the arresting and knotty question which lies behind the dispute now raging in Washington.

It is regrettable that, so far, the light which the Vinson hearings have shed has been accompanied by so much heat. But it is far better that the deep division of opinion among our leaders be exposed and explored now while we have a margin of safety and error, than to explode like a defective gun in our hands under far more dangerous circumstances.

Secretary Symington's assertion that the hearings are jeopardizing national security is far from convincing. In supporting this charge, he found himself in the awkward position of pleading with the Vinson Committee and the public to rely on the expert judgment of General Vandenberg and other uniformed airmen and, at the same time, attacking the Navy for resisting civilian control of the armed forces.

His second point lies closer to the true issue. This is not a technical military question, although it does involve technical matters. It is not a question of whether a gun or a howitzer is more effective in rolling country, or of developing air combat tactics to fit the high speeds of jet fighters, or even of determining whether the B-36 is the best obtainable intercontinental bomber in the present state of the art.

Such questions the civilians may well leave to artillerymen and airmen. But the question whether area bombing shall be the main focus of our offensive potentialities is a mixed question of diplomacy, politics, economics, morals and—to be sure—military technique. It is a perfect illustration of the necessity of civilian control of the military authorities in a democracy, because it is the kind of question which should never be left to a purely military determination.

Everyone's Concern

IT IS, FINALLY, as important as any problem which confronts us today. It cannot be solved by "unification." It cannot and should not be handled by the Joint Chiefs of Staff alone, or within the five walls of the Pentagon. It is of deep concern to the State Department, to all our governmental leaders, to all citizens, to our allies, and, indeed, to generations unborn. The line of demarcation between war and peace is more shadowy today than ever. How our offensive strength is arrayed directly affects the strength of our position at the international conference table. It has a profound and direct influence on Soviet policy.

Where area bombing with atomic or lesser bombs would be in accordance with enlightened self-interest must depend, in short, on the circumstances that confront us. Clearly, we must not find ourselves in the absurd and muscle-bound position of being able only to throw a "Sunday punch." Even if the international picture does not improve, it may be that the belligerent or semi-belligerent situations which arise will call for much more limited and yet decisive military action.

But it is of the most vital importance that our decisions in this critical sphere be enlightened ones. Some facets of the matter must be determined behind closed doors, but, in the long run, enlightenment depends upon free and full public discussion and a high degree of public interest. That is why the Vinson hearings, despite the immediate wounds they have inflicted, are a good thing for the country.

As General Eisenhower said, the participants in the controversy are distinguished and valiant men who have the interest of the country at heart. The vigor of their expressions is a measure of the depth and difficulty of the problem. It is the democratic tradition that questions touching the common weal be decided in open meeting.

By Ruth Gruber

Miss Gruber has just returned from the Middle East.

NEW YORK (NYHT)—In an exodus not unlike that from Egypt 3000 years ago, between 40,000 and 50,000 Jews of the Yemen, southwestern Arabia, have been pouring into the British protectorate of Aden and from there are being flown to Israel on an all-American airlift.

Strictest censorship, because of the political dangers, curtained the operation throughout the summer and fall.

American-built 5-54 Skymasters, with American pilots, have been flying 1600 miles nonstop from Aden to Israel, transporting Yemenite Jews wearing long robes, silver-fringed hoods, prayer shawls and love-locks, looking like people of the Bible. There are no navigation guides. A forced landing in any of the Arab countries might be disastrous.

Some 500 Yemenites have been flown to Tel Aviv every day since the beginning of the summer. Some 29,000 have been evacuated, and an estimated 1000 to 17,000 are moving along the roads of Yemen, pushing to a camp in Aden run by the American Joint Distribution Committee.

The Price of Passage

AS THE first correspondent permitted to fly the entire airlift, I flew from Israel across the Negeb to Aqaba, down the Red Sea to Aden, spent long days at the J. D. C. camp in the blistering desert 13 miles outside Aden and drove across the desert to the Sultan of Lahej's domain.

There I watched the Arabs crowd the fleeing Jews into the customs building. They took a final head tax of three silver Maria Theresa dollars (worth about one American dollar) for each person—from a 2-day-old baby to an 80-year-old man—with an additional head tax for each piece of their belongings and for their most precious possession, hand-painted holy scrolls on natural skins. Squatting on the floor, the Arabs counted piles of silver while the people looked on in terror.

Back in the J. D. C. camp, I watched the Jews pouring in too exhausted to speak. Said to comprise the oldest Jewish community in the world, they had been told by the Imam of the Yemen that they could leave his country provided they left their property behind and paid him a head tax.

Every Jew pulled up stakes. They rushed to San'a, the capital; they hired trucks, the wealthier paying for the poor. They rode down the mountains to the border of Aden, paying ransom to each sultan and little sheikh on the way.

Lajev was the last frontier. At night, in a convoy of trucks and ancient American touring cars, they squeezed together and rode in terror through Aden to the J. D. C. camp.

Detained at Border

THERE nurses and field men gave them first bread and water. In the morning they were clothed, vaccinated and treated for malaria, which the doctors believe they picked up at the border between Yemen and Aden.

British guards held them at the border, allowing only enough to funnel across to keep the camp population at about 3000.

Under the principle of "first in, first out," the families received Israeli identity cards and new clothing for Israel. Then they were put on trucks and taken to the airport, where they squatted on the ground under the wing of a Skymaster.

The Skymasters, operated by NEAT (Near East Air Transport, an American company), had been reconverted for their human cargo. Their plush seats had been pulled out and replaced by wooden benches like those in an American waiting room. On the plane on which I flew, there were 140 Yemenite Jews.

According to most historians, Jews have been in the Yemen since before the second destruction of the temple in Jerusalem in 70 A. D., keeping themselves intact through their religious fervor. Though they lived among the Arabs and spoke Arabic, their men all studied Hebrew and knew the Bible as do few people in the west, copying the Old Testament in beautiful scrolls as monks copied the New Testament through the Middle Ages.

Blind With Ecstasy

EACH DAY they prayed fervently, "Next year, Oh Lord, in Jerusalem." And each day for some 500 Yemenites, the prayer is now coming true. In a few months it will have come true for the last Jew to leave the Yemen in an American plane.

They fly up the Red Sea in about 8½ hours and land at Lydda, where some fling their arms up in prayer. Some kiss the long-dreamed-of soil, and some shut their eyes with ecstasy as though the sight of the Holy Land blinded them.

As soon as possible, they are resettled in villages and on farms, put to work in the orange groves and on public works projects, especially building roads.

Since the creation of Israel in May, 1948, 300,000 immigrants have arrived from all over the world. No group has been more welcome than these people from the desert and mountains of the Yemen.

Gentle, soft-spoken, musical, they are superb artists, silversmiths and craftsmen. They come from such poverty and degradation that everything in Israel seems magnificent.

Visiting Shah Faces Slim Pickings

Apart from wanting to see America and meet American leaders, the Shah and his advisers feel they need help. They want military help because of the Russian colossus on their northern border, and economic help because of the desperate poverty of their people.

Not long ago the Shah was talking to an American friend about American policy. He said he could not understand why the United States was pouring more than a hundred million dollars' worth of military equipment into neighboring Turkey and was not doing anything comparable for Iran.

"Don't you see," the Shah asked, "that if Iran falls to the Russians, Turkey will be outflanked in three weeks?"

In the economic field, Iran wants wheat because of a drought and near famine conditions in Azerbaijan Province. It also wants what every other Asiatic country wants: loans or grants of dollars for economic development.

The Shah's eagerness will not be less after he has seen Hoover Dam and the Salt River development in Arizona, the highways and airports, the railroads and transmission lines, and the whole coast-to-coast pageant of American riches and power.

27-Million Limit

IF he expects quick results from his appeal he is almost certain to be disappointed. Iran already has a share of 27 million dollars of the Military Assistance Program earmarked jointly for Iran, the Philippines and Korea. This share is not likely to be increased appreciably next year, even though it is far short of what the Shah thinks he needs.

The Iranians would like to use some of their military assistance for nonmilitary supplies, like locomotives, which might strengthen the defense of their country. But this, too, is frowned upon in Washington, where a basic principle of the military aid program is that it must be used for military purposes without distorting the economy of a beneficiary country.

Iran, like India and other needy countries in Asia, is outside the Marshall Plan. This means that any economic help up to now has had to come from the Export-Import Bank, the World Bank, or from devices like a barter deal of food surpluses for strategic materials.

One such barter was discussed earlier this year, when the Iranians offered opium—a stockpile item needed for American military medicine—in return for wheat. The price they asked for the opium was too high, and the deal fell through. The Iranians finally had to buy 100,000 tons of wheat from Russia—for sterling—and another hundred thousand here—for dollars.

U. S. Policy Applies

PERHAPS something can be done next year, with new legislation, to advance American farm surpluses to the Iranians, and to give them greater technical assistance under the Point Four program. Perhaps the Iranians will come forward with specific projects that will merit moderate-sized loans from either the World Bank or the Export-Import Bank, or both. But the immediate outlook for the Iranians is not hopeful—except for one all-important fact.

This is Iran's strategic position between the Persian Gulf and the Soviet border. If the American policy of the containment of Russia means anything, it means that Iran must be strong enough to withstand a possible Soviet lunge toward the vast Iranian oil fields and the warm water ports leading to the Indian Ocean.

The American welcome to the Shah is intended to demonstrate to the Iranians and to the Russians that the United Sates is steadily and vitally interested in keeping Iran free.

American officials believe the young Shah has tried sincerely, and with some success, to give his country enlightened rule and to pull his people out of the morass of poverty, illiteracy and disease in which almost 90 percent of them live. The Administration here regards him as a constitutional ruler who will not fall into his father's errors, and who is worthy of American support.

America's reputation in present-day Iran is high, and not only because America has dollars to give. Repeatedly in the past 40 years the Iranians have turned to American advisers because they felt they could trust them.

Today 11 American engineering companies, forming a syndicate known as Overseas Consultants, Inc., are helping the Iranians to carry out a seven-year development program that will cost the equivalent of about 700 million dollars, to be paid for partly from oil royalties and partly from the dollar loans the Iranians hope to get here.

American technologists, scholars, teachers, soldiers, have helped to build an American influence that is remarkably strong in Iran, considering how far apart the two countries are in their geography, traditions and culture. The Soviet influence, though near at hand, has been checked so far.

With Iran, as with other non-Soviet countries of Asia, the problem today is not whether America can afford to support and strengthen them. It is whether America can afford not to.

The Gallup Poll

Democratic Victories Reflected Nation-Wide Trend

By George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

THE DEMOCRATIC sweep in the New York Senate race, whose outcome was indicated by the American Institute of Public Opinion in a pre-election survey, has started widespread speculation as to the probable strength of the Democratic Party in the 1950 Congressional races.

Some observers have even projected the outcome into the 1952 presidential race, since President Truman participated directly in the New York election by speaking on behalf of Senator-elect Herbert H. Lehman.

How strong is the Democratic Party nationally?

The New York election took place in the midst of a strong Democratic tide nationally. Candidate John Foster Dulles had to buck this tide. Conversely, the general trend helped Lehman, in contrast to 1946, when he first ran for the Senate and was beaten by Senator Irving M. Ives.

That was a Republican year, when the trends were all away from the Democratic Party and the Republicans captured control of both Senate and House.

Now three years later, institute tests show that the Democratic Party would hold a big edge if the congressional elections were held at this time.

Here is the way the party stood nationally in a survey reported two weeks before the New York election.

"If you were voting for Congressman today, would you be most likely to vote for the Republican, the Democratic or the candidate of some other party?"

The vote:

Democratic	45%
Republican	32
Other parties	3
Undecided	20

Far more voters classify themselves as Democrats than as Republicans, especially the young voters. In reply to a survey question, "In politics as of today, do you consider yourself a Republican, a Democrat or an independent?", more than twice as many voters under 30 called themselves Democrats as Republicans—an important source of "new blood" for the Democratic ranks.

President Truman's personal popularity was checked in mid-October and found to be high, with 51 percent approving the way he is handling his job in the White House, 31 per cent disapproving and 18 percent giving no opinion.

One of the services performed by public opinion polls has been to measure public sentiment on specific issues as distinguished from candidates; in other words, to define more clearly just what voters had in mind when they went to the polls on election day.

How would the total electorate of the Nation vote today on the issues raised in the New York campaign, such as Federal aid to education, "socialized medicine," labor legislation and civil rights? The institute is taking a series of surveys to find the answers.

Rugged Book About Rugged Outfit

A Marine History in Marine Lingo

By Walter Wood

THE OLD BREED. By George McMillan. Infantry Journal Press. 483 pp. $6.50.

GEORGE McMILLAN has written a history of the First Marine Division which reads like a novel. Every man from the outfit will want to read it. So will every American to whom "Guadalcanal" meant an almost indescribable fight in Jap-infested jungle.

McMillan, who gave up his job as acting chief of the OWI news bureau to become a Marine combat correspondent, had access to every available Marine Corps record as well as Army battle reports of the actions in which the First fought. More important—and the one great thing which makes "The Old Breed" different from other military and naval history books — McMillan interviewed members of the First who lived to fight another day, and he uses their words. In addition, he called upon the personal diary of Lieut. Gen. Clifton B. Gates, Marine Corps commandant, who was a colonel on Guadalcanal.

GEORGE McMILLAN

The book is as rugged as the three battle-worn Leathernecks on its dust jacket. One chapter particularly illustrates the profound pull combat has on the minds of men.

It is about a tiny island named Pavuvu, the First Division's "rest camp" after the Battle of Cape Gloucester. One of the Marines who went there after surviving the mud, the bombs, the jungle and the Japs of New Britain, put the muzzle of his rifle in his mouth and blew off the top of his head.

The Truth at Last

ALL Marines will be happy about two things "The Old Breed" does:

1. It gives the first true story of what happened the nights of September 12 and 13, 1942, on what has become known as Edson's Ridge, the crucial battle of the Guadalcanal campaign.

2. It gives the most vivid and complete report yet of the fight on Pelellu, the most poorly reported battle of the Pacific war.

Lieut. Col. Merritt A. (Red Mike) Edson of the famed Raider Battalion, put the will in his men to continue fighting on Guadalcanal. To one battered group wandering aimlessly around the ridge, Edson yelled angrily, pointing toward the Japanese: "Listen, you guys, the only thing those people have got that you haven't is guts." He grabbed the men and led them forward to new positions to hold the ridge. Then he flopped on his stomach as the area was raked by Japanese fire.

On Peleliu, men drank water from a shellhole in which Jap bodies had floated.

In describing how the airport at Peleliu was taken, McMillan uses a letter written by Capt. Julian Dusenbury of Florence, S. C., to his mother. Dusenbury fought on with the division and in its next campaign—Okinawa—he was the first to enter Shuri Castle, the Japanese headquarters. He did not have an American flag to raise, so he substituted a Confederate flag which he carried in his helmet.

Dusenbury was full of holes when he left Okinawa in a hospital plane. Today he's a member of the South Carolina Legislature. But he can't walk.

A 19-Month Job

McMILLAN spent 19 months on "The Old Breed." He read everything he could find about battles and their effects on men, even a little-known book written by Walt Whitman when he was a Civil War nurse in a Washington hospital.

In talking to the Leathernecks quoted in his book, McMillan used what psychiatrists call the "deep interview." He had one interview recorded. It was with one of the three survivors of the terrible Goettge patrol on Guadalcanal. McMillan didn't want to lose any of Sergt. Charles G. (Monk) Arndt's words.

The format of the book is as formidable as its episodes. It is 8x11 inches in size. This was necessary to achieve elegance of layout.

The book was laid out by Roland James, former Marine combat artist, who now heads the art department of a New York advertising agency. James not only scaled the dramatic action photos but drew the sensitive wash drawings which head the chapters and are interspersed through the text.

Every surviving member of The First may have a copy of "The Old Breed" free, made available through post exchange funds. It will be mailed to those whose addresses are known. Others may write for it to: First Marine Division Historical Board, 1115 17th st. nw., Washington 6, D. C.

Short Shrift for His Foes

John L.'s Quotes Spice A Reverent Biography

By Sam Stavisky

JOHN L. LEWIS: An Unauthorized Biography. By Saul Alinsky. Putnam. 387 pp. $4.

FRANKLIN ROOSEVELT, Philip Murray, William Green, Frank Murphy, Harold Ickes, Sidney Hillman, Dave Dubinsky, Van Bittner, Jim Carey . . . All who fought or frustrated John L. Lewis were FOOLS! That is the general impression emanating from Saul Alinsky's story of the man with the mountainous eyebrows and cavernous eyes.

The title of this book emphasized that it is "An Unauthorized Biography." There's no reason to doubt it; nor is there much reason to believe that John L. would not authorize it.

Alinsky is Boswell-like in his reverence for the man who is the most powerful and compelling figure in the American labor movement. Certainly he criticizes the master—but always with affection and admiration.

Master's Own Words

BELOVED and hated, worshiped and feared, John L. Lewis has been hero, Hercules, Hamlet, and sometimes—when acting—something of the ham. But he's never been a mediocrity. He's always been a somebody, with forceful ideas and impulses. Alinsky captures many of the master's moods, thoughts, opinions, in the master's very words. The biography is worth the time of reading if only for the direct quotes.

One of the best quotes shows up in a footnote. The time is December 18, 1948. The place is the dining room of the Carlton. Lewis and the author are lunching. Two tables away sits a national officer of the CIO, which Lewis founded in 1935, quit in 1942. Lewis spotted this onetime lieutenant of his, frowned, and then turning to Alinsky chuckled:

"When I see any of them (CIO officers), I feel like a mastiff dog stalking down the street while a puny Pekingese pup skulks well behind eating of my leavings."

There are some wonderful quotes, giving John L.'s version of various incidents between himself and President Roosevelt, Governor Murphy of Michigan, Philip Murray, and other headline names of our time. There are explanations—or rationalizations—for everything that happened.

Lewis says he knew, for example, that Wilkie never had a chance in 1940. Yet he staked his presidency of the CIO on Wilkie's winning. Why? So as to give Lewis—no longer the titual leader of the CIO—the opportunity to effect an "accouplement" of the AFL and the CIO, and thereby unify labor.

Two-Edged Opinion

AS FOR ROOSEVELT, the boss of the United Mine Workers suspected the pro-labor leanings of the late President, Lewis explains. Then FDR was prowar. And then there was the question of the third term.

Remember Lewis' speech denouncing Roosevelt? Among other things, Lewis said: "Personal craving for power, the overweening abnormal and selfish craving for increased power, is a thing to alarm and dismay . . ." Almost the same words being used these days by his own enemies to describe John L.

In summing up the confusing personality of Lewis — and the summary is itself confusing—the biographer states: "Contrary to public opinion, Lewis does not nurse grudges . . ." That statement is not only contrary to public opinion; it's fantastic.

John L. Lewis was a great man. He is a great man. His every word and action is big news. (On Tuesday, for instance, The Washington Post carried five different stories devoted to various facets of the great man.) Several biographies have been written about Lewis, each giving us several glimpses of this man of destiny.

What this country needs is several more biographies of one of the most remarkable men of our century.

Polls Revive A Bit After Postmortem

By John J. Corson

THE POLLS AND PUBLIC OPINION, edited by Norman C. Meier and Harold W. Saunders. Holt. $3.50.

THE PRE-ELECTION POLLS OF 1948, a report to the Committee on Analysis of Pre-Election Polls and Forecasts, Bulletin 60, 1949, Social Science Research Council.

The polls have made at least a partial comeback. The Gallup Poll accurately predicted Herbert Lehman's victory in the New York senatorial race. On the morning after election, George Gallup, hence, reported that he would enjoy "eating pheasant after having eaten so much crow."

This book reports one of two efforts to ascertain why Dr. Gallup, and his contemporaries, Mr. Roper and Mr. Crosley, have had to eat crow since the presidential election of 1948. It reports the discussions of a group of experts who met at the University of Iowa in February. They took stock of the polls' failures, and discussed, at length, what improvements are necessary in the theory and methods of poll taking.

Nowhere in this volume do these experts add up their conclusions. This is unfortunate, for most of those who count in the polling business were there: Messrs. Gallup and Crosley, Morris Hansen, the census expert, and such leaders from the universities as Paul Lazarsfeld, Sam Stouffer and Hadley Cantril.

Yet this volume is a veritable gold mine for the student of public opinion polling. It includes excellent papers on the determinants of public opinion, the use of polls in elections, and the all-important problem of how to obtain a reliable sample to poll. The reader must dig for what he wants, but both the papers included, and the verbatim reports of views expressed in discussions, are readable and informative.

Perhaps the most interesting chapter is that in which these experts state their opinions of the second effort that has been made to determine why the polls missed in 1948. This effort is the comprehensive study of "The Pre-Election Polls of 1948" by a special committee for the Social Science Research Council. The experts' discussions, as they appear in type, suggest a polite and careful appreciation of this thoroughgoing and merciless—even though constructive—analysis of the polls' shortcomings.

For students of polling who seek a factual, unornamented appraisal of the polls and the current state of polling techniques, "The Pre-Election Polls of 1948" is the essential volume. The committee which produced this volume demonstrates that the debacle of 1948 was more attributable to the failure of the pollsters to do their job thoroughly and well, than to basic and irremediable defects in the theory and techniques by which polls can be taken.

Autobiography Born of Suffering

Rabbi Wise, a Pursuer of Ideals

By Alfred Steinberg

CHALLENGING YEARS: THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF STEPHEN WISE. Putnam. 323 pp. $4.

WHEN historians provide the final summing up of the first half of the twentieth century, the name of Stephen Wise will certainly be recorded among its epoch leaders. For Rabbi Wise, as much as any man of his day, came to personify a goodly number of the perplexing issues facing America. His life spanned half that of his country, and his death this year has cut one of the few remaining links present-day America held with its past.

RABBI WISE

Stephen Wise was four men. He was first and foremost a Jew. As a non-assimilationist, he fully believed that the Jew's contribution to America must be made as a Jew and not as an American Jew. For this reason, a large share of America's Jewry opposed him bitterly when he took upon himself the task of turning them into Zionists. These Jews he labeled "auch and bauch," to denote their Judaism as something either forced on them by the accident of birth or related to their fondness for Jewish-style cooking.

The key to Wise's Zionism was that the disinherited Jews of the world should have the opportunity to go to a land of their own and that their more fortunate brethren in the democratic countries should help make this possible. To him, Zionism was "both a mournful necessity and a glorious ideal." It took Hitler and his slaying of more than 6,000,000 European Jews to vindicate Rabbi Wise in his fight for a Jewish haven.

Stephen Wise was also an outstanding civic leader. He was forever organizing citizens' committees to look into graft, crime and disease. A great needler, he reveled in awakening citizens to their responsibilities as Americans. No man fought Tammany Hall so bitterly as he. "King Richard" Croker and Jimmy Walker were among those whom he bested. In his civic enterprises, his friends were legion. He was on a first name basis with Presidents Roosevelt, Taft and Wilson.

Rabbi Wise was also a labor partisan. The only time he addressed a Chamber of Commerce banquet he gave a rousing union speech. On the basis of his experience as Commissioner of Child Labor in Oregon and as a labor mediator, he believed that "No basic change could be made in the life of workers until they had won the right to organize and bargain collectively."

The fourth Stephen Wise was the founder and chief proponent of the interfaith movement in this country. He chided Jews to accept the story of Jesus and consider him as a moral teacher, as a man and a Jew of whom they could be proud. And he spoke in hundreds of churches throughout the land, reminding Christians that as Christians they must be just to Jews.

Stephen Wise was not perfect. Some called him an eternal troublemaker. Others called him a radical. He was vain about his handsome, statemanlike appearance and he impressed many as an actor carried away by his role. But he did stir America and our traditions have profited from his activities.

He wrote his autobiography during the last year of his life while he suffered from a malignant stomach ailment which finally destroyed him. Despite this, his story has a tenderness that will make all Americans feel that the pursuit of ideals is man's greatest hour.

Biographer Admits Some Faults

Milton's Poetry Wears a Straitjacket

JOHN MILTON, ENGLISHMAN. By James Holly Hanford. Crown, 272 pp. $3.75.

CERTAINLY one of the strangest of the great literary reputations is that of John Milton, Puritan poet, propagandist and statesman, the thrice-married proponent of chastity who spent his life worrying about Original Sin.

Despite a few exquisite lyrics, a small sheaf of good sonnets, the celestial organ music of certain passages of "Paradise Lost," and isolated lines of "L'Allegro," "Lycidas" and "Samson Agonistes," the great bulk of Milton's poetry strikes many discerning critics as being virtually unreadable.

In the realm of prose, the "Aeropagitica" remains as the great and classic defense of freedom of the press, a mighty cornerstone in the fortress of our civil liberties. "Of Education" was at least ahead of its time on its subject, and "Doctrine and Discipline of Divorce" contains much common sense intermingled with personal passion and pompous display of erudition. But the empty ferocity of so many of Milton's disputatious pamphlets on political and religion strikes the modern ear as the querulous echo of a tempest in a teapot.

James Holly Hanford, without any question the greatest of the living Milton scholars, is not unaware that his subject lacks appeal for our unpuritanical era. He is even so critical of his beloved protagonist as to admit that Milton preferred blank verse because he had trouble with rhyme.

A Snuffed Flame

BUT it seems to me that Hanford misses the great central fact about Milton's relative failure as a poet. Milton dammed up within himself the natural impulses which make poetry of any sort come flamingly alive. Spenser was one of his chief influences. Yet how seldom was Milton to match the music, the felicity and the sensuous imagery which flowed from the author of "The Faery Queen."

There is something sickly, introverted and ascetic, if not actually neurotic and perverted, about Milton. His letters to his friend, Charles Diodati, bespeak something less than normal masculinity. One does not envy Milton's three tragic wives or the daughters who were forced to read to him during his blindness in languages they did not understand.

Poetic Sermonizing

FURTHERMORE, Milton was the victim of too much scholarship and too little first-hand experience. His poetry is overburdened with classical allusions and impoverished for the lack of quivering, immediate sensory perceptions. Most of his verse is in some degree derivative. Nor can the cathedral-filling oratory of his poetic sermonizing make up for the lack of the vivid detail which in lesser but better poets rends ice water along the spine.

Milton was too talented and too intelligent to be wasted on the ministry. But his intentions were often those of the proselytizer.

That he served his country well during the commonwealth and protectorate, no student of history can deny. That he left for posterity a limited body of stern prose and somberly beautiful poetry is also undeniable. And, as Hanford rightly insists, Milton's influence upon the Puritan seedbed of American democracy can never be overestimated.

For all this he doubtless deserves the high place he holds in the affections of such meticulous scholars as the present biographer. But that he will ever again be able to sway the commonality seems highly unlikely. Milton helped to make ours a better world, but in so doing he lost his audience.

Snowdrifts in the Tyrol

A Tenuous Thread Binds Stories by Bemelmans

By Orval Hopkins

THE EYE OF GOD. By Ludwig Bemelmans. Viking. 312 pp. $3.

OLD Bemelmans fans know the author and artist as a surpassing "short piece" man, and some others know him for a number of ingenious and delicately illustrated children's books. His "Madeleine," for tots, the famed Hotel Splendide stories and the equally illustrious tale of "Putzi" are only a few examples of the shiny, refreshing Bemelmans talent.

The talent seems a little tarnished in this collection, which Bemelmans or his publisher has chosen to call a novel. The attention to detail is here, but often there is so much detail one forgets where one was getting to:

"He was now busy squeezing the lemon with his right hand, while the left was expectantly cramped around the upheld fork. Thoughtfully he looked out of the window, then held the schnitzel down with a fork and sliced off a piece. He put it in his mouth and half closed his eyes in delight, then shifted knife and fork from one hand to the other, so that he could shovel up some of the potato salad."

Bemelman's has written a series of stories about some hotels and some people in the Austrian Tyrol. He has hung them up on a very tenuous line and called the collection a novel. The people spend much of their time, one feels early in the book, digging each other out of tremendous drifts spawned by avalanches.

Come Herr Haberdietzl, a narrow, noisy, demanding entrepreneur who establishes a resort hotel in the beloved Tyrol country. Come the Germans, who make things rather rough on the native folk. The latter, however, see it through with courage and good spirit, except for one or two reprehensible types who stray into the Party, and there is another feeling that Bemelmans has done most of this before.

The Eye of God is a tall crag, at whose foot lies the village of Aspen, where the author has set his story. Its fauna, flora and landscape are like that of its namesake, Aspen, Colo., and it is inhabited in part by "married," or legitimate, children, and "single" children, "the members of a populous illegitimate kindergarten." One suspects that this is one of the touches Bemelmans inserts to demonstrate that his people have a high regard for nature and the simple life and have no time for the stuffy conventions to be found, presumably, at lower climes.

LUDWIG BEMELMANS
. . . A frostbitten style

Bemelmans' demonstration of an instance of paternal-filial mutual love depicts both father and son to be such strong, inarticulate types that it's almost a pleasure not to meet them at closer range. His Herr Haberdietzl is blustery and even, at times, awesome, but is never the sharply-drawn, calculating Monsieur Victor who so successfully dominated the Hotel Splendide stories.

Any Bemelmans book could not, obviously, be without its special delights. One of the "chapters," "The Knife Thrower"—a surgeon in a convent who flings his instruments dangerously close to the assisting nuns' heads—contains a Bemelmans' version of the story of Joseph and his brothers that is a pleasure. Many of the other tales are talky and a little gross. They give the impression that the Bemelmans style has been frostbitten.

Bleak Story Of Woman's 'Strength'

THE WOMAN OF ROME. By Alberto Moravia. Farrar, Straus. $3.50.

ALBERTO MORAVIA'S novel about the tenuous dividing line between good and evil, love and lust, fear and resignation, will almost certainly prove something new to American readers.

"The Woman of Rome" is a translation of Moravia's twelfth novel, "La Romana." It is the story of Adriana, a prostitute, who was, in an instinctive, childish way, stronger and wiser than were the birds of passage who became her lovers; it is the story of a woman trebly bound by her poverty, her ignorance, and by the lurking shadowy force which was the "politics" of Mussolini's Italy.

To one of Adriana's beauty, her station in life and her sentimental affection for people, it seemed almost an inevitability that she should become a streetwalker. She says: "So after a few hours of anguish, I gave up the unequal struggle against what appeared to be my fate. Indeed, I welcomed it with greater affection as one embraces a foe one cannot defeat; and I felt liberated."

And again: "I had realized that my strength lay not in my desiring to be something I was not, but in accepting what I was. My strength lay in my poverty, my profession, mother, my ugly house, my simple clothes, my humble origin, my misfortunes, and more profoundly in the feeling which made me able to accept all these things."

Although primarily a study of Adriana, other creatures of her world are examined and understood through her instinct: Gino, whom she had hoped to marry; Astarte, Fascist police chief whom she obsessed; Sonzogno, murderer and maniac.

"The Woman of Rome" is definitely not to be classed as erotica, and, if in spite of Moravia's skill and simplicity, Adriana occasionally lacks in credibility, it is a small fault in a bleak and powerful novel.

When Films Were Stuff Of Dreams

THE DREAM MERCHANTS. By Harold Robbins. Knopf. 496 pp. $3.50.

THEY were the "dream merchants"—Johnny Edge, the carnival kid; Peter Kessler, the hardware store owner, and George Pappas, who operated the soda parlor.

They were immigrant Jews, half-educated Greeks and Italians, but they were all natural showmen who knew what their neighbors wanted.

Johnny Edge quit the carnival in 1908 to operate a nickelodeon in Rochester. Peter Kessler drifted further and further away from his hardware store, concentrating his energies and hopes in the nickelodeon while his wife, Esther, took in the cash. Even George Pappas postponed his return to his native Greece when he learned that Peter was selling out his nickelodeon business to seek greener pastures in New York.

The story of the beginnings of the movie industry is told in alternating flashbacks from the days of the movie shorts and serials to the full-length Hollywood feature of today. There were successes and setbacks. But the "dream merchants" had a dream, sparked by the far-sighted Johnny Edge, and that dream came true.

The characters in Harold Robbins' novel are real people, far from the Hollywood "types." This warm and engrossing story of the film industry should be a "must" on your current reading list.

A Balanced Biography

The More Human Side of Shaw

By Sterling North

DEAR G. B. S.:

Genius cannot live by praise alone. With all your foremost critics dead—Harris, Chesterton and Wells—you must be weary at times on Mount Olympus.

WILLIAM IRVINE

Having helped create through your brilliant Fabianism the dreariest England since Cromwell, you are living out your final paradox as the scintillating author of socialist austerity.

As an irresponsible Methuselah, you seem less wise than half a century ago. For three decades now you have been praising dictatorships, calling cheap tyrants "our boys," cheering Mussolini for clearing away the putrefying corpse" of Italian liberty, lauding Stalin's slave state about which you know less than nothing, while addressing your American radio audience with the witty salutation, "Hello boobs!"

Despite your great wealth, your great age, and your huge annual income (principally American), you continue to emit shrill cries about the British income tax, the mildest of all the socialist measures you have spent a lifetime defending.

I have just been reading what seems to me the best and most balanced biography from among the many laid at your feet, "The Universe of G. B. S.", by William Irvine (Whittlesey, $5.) In some ways it tops those of Henderson and even Pearson, is fairer, of course, than anything written by Chesterton or Harris, and is nearly as witty and never as one-sided as the autobiographical sketches from your own pen.

'Warmed Both Hands'

ONCE more you emerge as the many-sided genius, the greatest music and drama critic of the fin de siecle, the bright student of Malthus, Bentham, Mills and Marx who with the help of Sidney Webb's encyclopedic mind sold Fabian socialism to England, the incomparable satirist who gave us such universally respected plays as "Mrs. Warren's Profession," "Candida," "Pygmalion," "Arms and the Man" and others not always so instructive or amusing.

For a puritan and a vegetarian whose defense of womankind is not always without malice, you certainly "warmed both hands at the fire of life," to quote your old friend Webb. It makes you a little more human to learn a few additional facts about your affairs of the head or heart with May Morris, Annie Besant, the "sexually insatiable" Jenny Patterson, Florence Farr, Mrs. Patrick Campbell and, of course, your nimble correspondent, Ellen Terry.

And how lucky after finding prototypes for your characters in some of these women, and stars for your plays in others, that you should marry so tolerant a "millionairess," willing to invite "beautiful young actresses" to Ayot-St. Lawrence for gay weekends!

But a word or two of serious criticism begins to slip into such latter-day tributes as this one by William Irvine. The term "mountebank" becomes more frequent. Your innumerable false prophecies (such as inevitable war between England and the United States) are coming home to roost. It becomes increasingly evident that you mean just what you say when you suggest "exterminating the poor."

It is good to learn that after guffawing at the cremation of your mother and making a witty speech at the cremation of your sister, you had the decency to be deeply moved by the cremation of your wife.

But must you continue to be the autobiographical hero of your own incredibly bad first novel, "Immaturity," even at the age of 94?

A Time for Wisdom

AFTER nine decades, you can still blame your lack of affection for human beings upon your unhappy childhood? Your aggressive attitude toward the world on your boyhood shyness? Your perverse statements during both wars and several revolutions upon your hatred of the capitalistic class (to which you, yourself, of course, belong)? Is there no truth at all in your "Back to Methuselah" theory that great age brings ever-increasing wisdom?

Much as the world admires your plays (particularly their prefaces), happy though we all are that you were not tied for life to your early jobs as land agent or telephone company employe, a world which has admired you and praised you for two thirds of your 90-odd years now expects that the least you can do with your incomparable fame is to stand by your early hope for humankind, to maintain some faith in democracy, and to admit even at this late date your tragic error concerning dictatorship of any and all varieties.

While the Malvern Festivals, commemorative volumes, new editions and productions of your plays, new biographies of your life and constant newspaper publicity raise you to the level of the sort of superman before whom you have always genuflected, you might, in all humility as a final modest gesture, deflate the least mature of all your attitudes: hero-worship.

Great as your role has been as entertainer, instructor, educator and gadfly to Philistia, your one most permanent work threatens to be the socialist superstate where quite possibly in years to come no such outspoken critic of the state as you have been will be allowed to write or even live.

Speak out, Shaw! You have one great subject left worthy of your pen and of your rage.

Respectfully,

STERLING NORTH.

Requires Revolutionary Role

U.S. Can End Cold War, CBS Newsman Convinced

By Kathleen L. Barber

THE STATE OF EUROPE. By Howard K. Smith. Knopf. 408 pp. $3.75.

NEARLY a decade ago Howard K. Smith's "Last Train from Berlin" was a cogent influence on American opinion of Nazi Germany. In "The State of Europe," Smith has written another startling book. It will please virtually no one. For in the passions of current world politics, most people read either to find an author who wisely agrees with them or to substantiate their already firmly held beliefs with new arguments. This book does not follow any popular line of thought; the author, chief of the European News Bureau of CBS, ably strikes out on his own.

At the end of 1946, world peace seemed to be within grasp, Smith says. The hope of peace and stability rested on the "tripod" of three great power blocs: America and the Western Hemisphere, Russia and the eastern European nations, and Britain and the nations of western Europe.

As the immediate cause of Britain's collapse, the cold spell in the winter of 1946-47 became the "watershed" of postwar history: "The essential third leg of the tripod collapsed; the mainstay of the scaffolding of growing stability fell down and left the peace in ruins." The author calls the crisis caused by western Europe's collapse "probably the most disturbing shakeup of the power equilibrium that has occurred on the map since the fall of Rome."

Rise of the East

IN a country-by-country survey of the European continent, Smith reconstructs the history of disintegrating relationships, broken agreements, political and economic failures that have marked the course of the Cold War to the present time.

He finds that there are profound forces at work, independent of current politics, to bring about a long-range decline in the standards of western Europe, and a corresponding and inevitable social and economic expansion in eastern Europe.

Western Europe's decline can be stopped, Smith says, only when it is recognized that the nineteenth century concept of the market is not adequate for our new industrial society, even when artificially propped up by the Marshall Plan, subsidies, quotas and tariff arrangements.

This commercial marketing system, with the profit motive as its incentive, Smith sees as the old road to maldistribution, unemployment, social unrest, the accession to power of the extreme right in France, Germany and Italy, and war. A planned European economy, emphasizing distribution, is necessary to enable western Europe to recover industrially and to maintain political freedom.

Banner of Change

HERE the United States enters, for the author believes it is in our hands to encourage social democracy in Europe. "In a time of revolution—when the revolution is virtually bound to be successful, either in a generation of peace if we are wise or a century of chaos if we are not—it is the act of wisdom to be the revolutionary power. Nail the banner of change to our own mast and ride an irrepressible tide to safe harbor."

Smith states flatly that by this course the United States can unilaterally end the Cold War. Such a policy will bring about a gradual decrease in tension if Russia's intensions are basically good. If, on the other hand, Russia's relentless purpose is domination and aggression, such a policy will undermine her in western Europe and encourage Titoism in eastern Europe so that a modus vivendi can be reached.

Like most books written rapidly to get into print before outdated by events, "The State of Europe" suffers from repetition and loose organization of material. But the matter is there, interestingly written because Smith has witnessed many of the events he describes. And he brings to his material a depth of perception and independence of thought uncommon in this kind of undertaking.

A Clew to Centralization

Angry Study of 12 Legislatures

By D. R. Barber

OUR SOVEREIGN STATE, edited by Robert S. Allen. Vanguard. 413 pp. $5.

THE HUE and cry is raised on all sides to return the powers of government to the States. But what kind of mechanism would be on the receiving end of such a transaction?

ROBERT ALLEN

This book reveals that what is already suspected in many quarters of being a basketful of 48 not-so-fresh eggs turns out to be just that. Fantastically unrepresentative legislatures, archaic, obfuscated constitutions, penurious, spoils-ridden administrations, capitals that are sinkholes of the intrigue of special interests—all are an unfailing pattern in practically every one of the 12 States examined in this powerful study.

This book cannot be dismissed as sensationalism. Each chapter is the product of a responsible, respected newspaperman resident or past resident in the State concerned. The commonwealths examined include Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, Georgia, Utah, Nebraska, Ohio, Wisconsin, California, Louisiana, Illinois and Texas.

For too long the American people have chosen to look the other way when State governments are discussed. Perhaps this is understandable in these times of growing centralized government. But in a rather heady introduction, Editor Robert S. Allen makes a pretty good case for showing that (a) State governments have voluntarily abdicated the power and respect they once held, and (b) the great commercial, banking, oil, shipping, and utility interests which have moved in on State governments have created in many cases a virtual necessity for the Federal Government to go to the rescue of the people.

Downright sickening is the melancholy account of the "Third Houses" to be found in and around every State legislature. By these, of course, are meant the ubiquitous lobbyists (in Pennsylvania tastefully referred to as legisiative engineers).

Open bribery is practically unheard of these days. Interests can be looked after much more effectively by carefully awarding big retainer fees to law firms one of whose partners is a member of the legislature. This is a widely used device. Only three Southern States are examined, but there is evidence enough to give a good idea of who's who and what's what behind the Dixiecrat movement.

This is an angry, cynical book. But one senses a feeling of resignation on the part of the newsmen doing the writing. Perhaps this is inevitable for men of their trade, who from the fringes have seen so much for so long. The style of writing is sharp and biting and every point hits home.

Some of the smelly aspects of State politics are skipped over lightly, as for instance, gerrymandering. On the other hand, well brought out is the cozy atmosphere prevailing in State legislatures, as in the hazy line sometimes found dividing the major parties.

Foreign observers have marveled at the way Americans take for granted their State governments. Perhaps if these observers looked a bit more closely they would see that there are definite motives behind the shifting of the spotlight from this middle level of our democracy.

The book might have suggested that a conscientous effort be made on the part of the State and local press to force into daylight this vital middle area. But from what the 12 writers have to say about most of the rural and big city newspapers in their States, that, unfortunately, isn't very likely.

When Tyranny Overwhelms

Kasenkina 'Melodrama' Explained

By Kathryn H. Stone

LEAP TO FREEDOM. By Oksana Kasenkina. Lippincott. $3.

OKSANA KASENKINA, who leaped from a window of the Russian Consulate in New York City and lived to taste freedom and tell her story, has now written it in a simple and moving book. The autobiography is far better than the newspaper articles which she dictated to Isaac Don Levine while she was still in the hospital.

MME. KASENKINA
. . . Subtlety failed her

Mme. Kasenkina and her husband were high school science teachers who began their careers almost simultaneously with the advent of communism. They were of middle class folk and grew up in a beautiful region of the Ukraine where their early lives were comparatively happy. Mme. Kasenkina's portrait of her father, the locomotive engineer, nature lover and amateur musician, is especially good.

The Kasenkinas sought the quieter values of the classics, music and, of course, their beloved science. They were in no way oriented toward politics, and thus they failed to comprehend the powerful forces about to engulf them.

Unusual Teacher

MME. KASENKINA was greatly influenced by a master teacher, Mme. Mazurenko, who apparently believed deeply in the importance of the individual human being. There is a striking similarity between Mme. Kasenkina's educational philosophy and her own best thought and practice.

Since the Soviets have always needed competent teachers, they kept the Kasenkinas. They were even obliged in some respects to treat them fairly well.

Mme. Kasenkina's family was crushed by the Soviet juggernaut. Her little daughter died of malnutrition, a result of famine in the '20s. Her husband, whose only crimes were that he had been briefly in a Czarist uniform in World War I and that he would not join the party, was periodically imprisoned and was eventually sent to Siberia, which was the last heard of him.

Taking her talented son, Oleg, Mme. Kasenkina transferred to an experimental agricultural school and tried to make at least an ostensible adjustment to Soviet educational methods. It became more and more difficult for her to play down the Leninist interpretations and to pervert what she knew to be the true findings of science. It is at once a tribute to her cleverness and a commentary on the stupidity of the Communists that she apparently succeeded throughout her career—even with Gromyko's son in the Soviet school in New York City—in teaching a great deal that was disapproved.

After Oleg was lost at the front in the defense of Moscow, Mme. Kasenkina's sole idea became to get out of Russia and act upon a faint hope of finding her son among refugees. Since Soviet officialdom wanted good teachers for its children, an opportunity came in 1946 for Mme. Kasenkina to come to the United States. She accepted it with great inner eagerness and outer calm.

Amoral Atmosphere

AS MME. KASENKA glimpsed the reality of American freedom, her long psychological struggle with her conscience increased. To make matters worse, those in the saddle at the consulate and the school seemed to operate entirely without morals, lying, stealing and spying among themselves and training their children to do likewise. That such people may be technically "educated" and competent increased their menace.

Even though she taught in this atmosphere, Mme. Kasenkina tried to save the best in the children. She opposed the mass mind with all the subtlety of her being.

"At the risk of being reported as a counter-revolutionary, I would constantly imply that in America existed that freedom of inquiry and that freedom of conscience so essential to real understanding." But in the end she could no longer be subtle, and she was scheduled to be returned to Russia.

This reviewer has heard a few skeptical Americans wonder why Mme. Kasenkina couldn't stick it out with her own people, and why she took so melodramatic a means of escape. The enormity of the Russian tyranny over the human spirit is indeed difficult for free Americans to realize. They should read this book.

In a Nutshell

PROUD HERITAGE. By Ilse Bischoff. Coward-McCann. $3.

GILBERT STUART, American portrait painter, grew up in a Rhode Island snuff mill and on the wharves of Newport. He spent the years of the American Revolution in London society, totally indifferent to the issues or outcome of the struggle; but was to become famous in his own time and in ours chiefly for his portraits of the Revolutionary leader, George Washington. Stuart's mercurial fortunes are lifelessly narrated in this rather maudlin biographical novel, written by an artist who, one is forced to conclude, should stick to her engravings.

BORN STRANGERS. By Helen Topping Miller. Bobs Merrill. $3.

A MISERY-LADEN catalog of births, marriages and deaths of two families, this tale centers on two men strange to each other's mode of living whose paths seem to cross mostly at the cemetery. For 267 pages covering three generations, Miss Miller settles and populates nineteenth century Michigan, with a side glance at the gold rush of '49 and the Civil War. The Riggs family is given a sympathetic touch as the author endeavors to justify the lonely, embittered grandfather and his frustrated wife. The free-handed Wixoms are a much more jovial group, and it is unfortunate that one of their three sons is left dangling in California; he might have enlivened this chronicle. There is a genealogical chart in case of confusion.

THE PRIMITIVE. By Feike Feikema. Doubleday. $3.50.

THIS is the first book of a trilogy to be known as "World's Wanderers." Thurs Wraidson, a huge, bumbling farm boy, product of an orphanage, is sent to a small religious college by a fanatical benefactress who trusts he will enter the ministry. In a style rather reminiscent of Thomas Wolfe, Feikema takes Thurs, with infinite detail, through his first awakenings of mind and body. There is much authentic Midwestern sectarian school atmosphere. "The Primitive" is an ambitious novel by a writer whose polish is negligible, but whose passions are profound.

A HANDBOOK OF HUMAN RELATIONS, By Everett R. Clinchy. Farrar, Straus. $2.

THIS useful little volume presents simply the tools for building good relationships among persons with different racial, religious and national backgrounds. Although written specifically for use by industrial and labor groups, the factual information and techniques of combating prejudice are applicable to any group situation. The author, president of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, has included a trenchant analysis of discrimination's high cost in production, skills, ideas and personal motivation. In the final chapter, a concrete program guide is offered for a series of meetings which would combine discussions and film strips on human relationships.

WHAT COOKS IN HOLLYWOOD: Edited by Dorothy and Maxwell Hamilton. Prepared for the Benefit of the Motion Picture Committee, Disabled American Veterans Service Foundation. 64 pp. Ill. $1.

HOLLYWOOD stars' favorite recipes, complete with their pictures and autographs, make up this novelty paper-bound cookbook which is being sold for the benefit of the Disabled American Veterans. Some foods are simple, some sumptuous. A certain singer submits Turkey and Eggs Crosby; Van Heflin offers his Singapore discovery, Chicken Almond. There is also a handy table of contents, with foods listed under types. A good condition to the shelf of cookbooks, it is available from the DAV, Box 7170, Chicago, 80, Ill.

This fetching montage decorates "Rector's Naughty Nineties Cookbook" (Doubleday, $4), in which Playwright Alexander Kirkland and Muriel Shaffer serve up a mixture of recipes and reminiscences of that era. There are more than 500 of the former.

The Coffin Corner . . .

MURDER BY GASLIGHT. Edited by Edward Wagenknecht. Prentice-Hall. $3.95.

"THE FIVE pieces in this book are not 'detective stories' in the ordinary sense of the term," says Mr. Wagenknecht in his learned introduction. "They are Victorian 'thrillers.'" Yet 324 of the 4377 pages in this fat collection are given over to a story that could easily be edited down into a representative Perry Mason puzzle, complete with lawyer-detective.

The novel in question is "Lady Audley's Secret," written by Mary Elizabeth Braddon about 1860. It sold a million copies and was dramatized and filmed, but is now out of print, Mr. Wagenknecht says. It is Victorian, all right, and the suggested editing would prune away much discursive philosophizing on such subjects as the purposelessness of human existence, woman's background place in Victorian society and the tea table as a stage for the exhibition of feminine charm. These ramblings are delightful in themselves, but they hang heavy on the slowly unwinding thread of narrative.

Barrister Robert Audley is introduced as an almost inanimate parasite, but he develops into a legal hawk quite as painstaking and knowledgeable as Mr. Gardner's boy Perry. If "Lady Audley's Secret" wasn't on your grandfather's top shelf, you'll enjoy this preview of the modern detective story.

Otherwise represented in this collection are Dickens, Wilkie Collins and Charles Reade, by some of their lesser known works. "The Trial for Murder" is a ghost story from one of the Christmas numbers of Dickens' magazine. "The Dead Alive" is Collins' fictional version of the Boorn case in Vermont in 1819, and Reade's "The Knightsbridge Mystery" is another true-to-form detective story with a seventeenth century highwayman setting.

Lastly, Mr. Wagenknecht gives us a rare item by Amelia Blandford Edwards, "A Night on the Borders of the Black Forest." A modern publisher would call this a "suspense story," with its build-up of terror and its slight excursion into clairvoyancy, though today's writers prefer a meatier explosion and are less leisurely in tamping the charge.

Mr. Wagenknecht explains satisfactorily why he used the "little" stories by Dickens, Collins and Reade instead of "Bleak House," "The Moonstone" and "Never Too Late to Mend," for instance, and why he included the little-known Miss Edwards. Yet you could skip the last 100 pages of this book and have a rewarding evening. It is enough that the editor has revived the story of Sir Michael Audley, his mysterious wife and his perspicacious nephew.

Notes on the Margin

Retirement Can Be a Frenzied Thing

By Lee Grove

WHEN Mrs. Alberta Graham of 1717 G st. nw. gave up teaching public-school music in Iowa some years ago, she decided to do what she had always wanted to do—write.

Mrs. Graham, who reared three sons, has been writing ever since. She has composed several hundred songs, tried her hand at plays and pageants, and in 1944 she enjoyed publication by Thomas Nelson & Sons of a book for teen-agers, "Thirty-One Roads to the White House." The book has gone through several editions and is now titled, "Thirty-Two Roads to the White House."

Last month the publishing house brought out a new book for young people by Mrs. Graham. It is "Strike Up the Band!—Band Leaders of Today." It will be followed, next October, by "They All Marched," the story of Sousa, Herbert, Pryor and other band leaders of the past.

Meanwhile, Abingdon-Cokesbury Press is bringing out her book on Columbus, for the fourth-grade level, in August.

All of which makes it sound as if the only thing Mrs. Graham has retired from is public-school teaching.

Biographer Pauses

IRVING BRANT of 3333 M st. se. last week sent to Bobbs-Merrill the manuscript of the third volume of his monumental four-volume biography of James Madison—and is not thinking of resuming work on the final volume for a few weeks.

The new volume covers the period 1787-1800, the framing of the Constiution and the fight between Madison and Hamilton. The preceding volume, "James Madison: The Nationalist," came out in the spring of '48.

Brant started on his great work in 1938, and says it is an outgrowth of an earlier book, "Storm Over the Constitution." "Storm" came out just about the time President Roosevelt's famous "court packing" plan became a public issue, and the work was much thumbed over by the bright young legal minds in the Government, all looking for justification of the President's plan.

New Deal-minded himself, this gave Brant great satisfaction.

In writing "Storm Over the Constitution," Brant found that there was no adequate biography of Madison and decided to remedy the situation. He believes that in Madison's life is a key to much of the misunderstanding of the relationship of Congress and the Supreme Court in regard to the enactment of laws.

Stark History

HARTZELL SPENCE — "One Foot in Heaven"—who spoke at The Washington Post Book and Author Luncheon last week, is working on two novels. One is a historical novel revolving around the discovery of the Amazon River by the Conquistadores.

It is not a sexy story, even if it is a historical novel, he said.

The other novel will probably be finished first. It is laid in the Somerset, Orange County, Va., neighborhood, and concerns the life of a man now dead.

The man, who must have been fascinating, was the son of a livery stable keeper, and rose to great social prominence. One day he got involved with his highborn wife about the ownership of the antique furniture she had brought to their home. Whereupon he canceled the property insurance and burned the house down, according to Spence.

Surely this could be said to be a case of the man having the last word.

THE gentle poet John Greenleaf Whittier, author of "Snowbound," left an estate of $134,000 when he died in 1892—half of it earned by his pen. (See the new biography "John Greenleaf Whittier, Friend of Man," by John A. Pollard, published by Houghton, Mifflin.)

New Maestro Calls for Harmony

By Harry N. Stull

HERBERT P. LEEMAN, recently elected president of the Federation of Citizens Associations, is a Washington native. His lifelong residence here, his prestige as a lawyer and his knowledge of public affairs will undoubtedly contribute to a successful administration.

STULL

His election was due, in part, to dissatisfaction over the conduct of Federation affairs. Charges of arbitrary rulings at meetings and of unauthorized statements on behalf of the Federation had led to open hostility among certain delegates.

Leeman made it plain that he will work assiduously to bring about harmony.

"I believe that the representatives of the organized citizens of this community owe it to themselves and the people they represent to study the problems confronting us and by their official acts let the people know, without the injection of personal feelings, what our groups believe to be in the interest of the city and the country," he said.

". . . I would like to see set in motion a program whereby a citizen in each city block would be interested to act as an organizer and endeavor to arouse the residents to a greater participation in civic affairs. It is my hope that factional differences, which have existed in the past in the Federation, can be wiped out and a unity of purpose attained that will result in greater accomplishments for the citizens of our city."

Sharing the Tax Load

ASSESSOR Edward A. Dent's attempt to round up 75,000 Washington residents who pay no District income tax, will be generally applauded. A large number of persons who receive the benefits of municipal services have been avoiding the tax by claiming official residence elsewhere. Payment of taxes can never be enjoyable, but the knowledge that thousands were avoiding the tax by a subterfuge made payments by conscientious citizens more disagreeable. If the Dent campaign succeeds, the entire burden will not continue to be borne by those who pay voluntarily and patriotically.

Our Traffic Lifesavers

THE safety awards which adorn the District Building board room testify to the fact that despite triangular corners, obstructive circles and heavy tourist traffic, this city's safety record is among the best in the Nation. Last year, Washington made a clean sweep of the Nation's traffic safety prizes. To George E. Keneipp, Director of Vehicles and Traffic, and his staff, should go a great measure of the credit, but the American Automobile Association, with its School Boy Patrols, and the Traffic Advisory Council deserve a large share. It is worthy of note that the pedestrian control system, which was derided by many at its outset, is now generally accepted by th public as a lifesaver.

A Good Friend Gone

REPRESENTATIVE GEORGE J. BATES of Massachusetts, who died in the recent plane collision at National Airport, had been a member of the House District Committee for 13 years. His continued willingness to serve on this committee (a post not generally sought by members of Congress) showed his intense interest in the affairs of the Capital. His municipal experience in his home city and his intimate knowledge of the affairs of this one, made him one of the ablest members in the committee's history.

Campbell Flop Hurt Byrd Machine

By Benjamin Muse

THE most potent figures in the Byrd political machine united in calling upon the voters last Tuesday to adopt a set of amendments to the Constitution of Virginia, and the voters hauled off and rejected them by a majority of better than three to one.

MUSE

It was a rebuff for the Byrd organization, and it stimulated the morale of the antimachine forces, whose most conspicuous leader is Francis Pickens Miller. But the election results are not to be appraised as simply as that.

For instance, the Fourth Congressional District, covering a stretch of southern Virginia which embraces both the city of Petersburg and Appomattox County, is a traditional Byrd machine stronghold. It gave Battle a 50 percent margin over Miller in the primary. Here, if anywhere, the voters might have been expected to trust Byrd, Tuck, Battle, et al. and go along with the constitutional amendments which they recommended. Not many of them could have been interested in joining the liberal Miller faction as such.

But the Fourth District rejected the amendments more overwhelmingly than the State as a whole. In Petersburg, the vote was 10 to 1 against the amendments, and in Powhatan County the negative vote was 12 to 1. Machine and antimachine alignments are little help in determining what happened there.

Followed Old Bent

THE Fourth District, however, has the highest proportion of Negroes among its citizens, and there, more than in any other section of Virginia, the race question has been through the years an important, and at times, the dominant, factor in politics. Petersburg was the home of the famous Gen. William Mahone and the operating center of his powerful political organization, built up—in prepoll tax days—on the Negro vote. The Fourth was, in fact, a Republican stronghold before the Constitutional Convention of 1902-1903. After that it swung sharply to the other extreme and is now the most stanchly Democratic district.

There was something that went a great deal farther back than Senator Byrd or Francis Pickens Miller or Stuart Campbell in the Fourth District performance last Tuesday. It was the old feeling that Negro voters are a menace and that the poll tax is a justifiable safeguard.

The results in the adjoining Third District, however, give a broader clew as to where the voters came from who romped on the Campbell amendments on election day. The Third District—the Richmond-Williamsburg area—has both a heavy Negro population and a heavy antimachine vote. The combination there of liberals and reactionary believers in the poll tax resulted in the most crushing defeat which the amendments received in any district—about seven to one.

The same pattern can be observed in the results of the voting elsewhere in the State. The Seventh District, which is short on both Negro population and antimachine strength, gave the amendments the best vote which they received—about one to two.

Area Vote Under Average

IN spite of the fact that Miller's antimachine faction came out of the primary triumphantly in Alexandria and in Arlington and Fairfax Counties, the vote against the amendments here was below the State average. The phenomenon suggests a minimum of race prejudice in this section.

The election also underlined the difficulty of putting across any long and involved series of constitutional amendments in a single election. It could be done only by a very powerful political organization—and the Byrd machine did not prove up to it.

Voters rejected the amendments for a variety of reasons. Some were suspicious of anything which the Byrd machine might offer; many who like the Byrd machine voted against the amendments because they believed in the poll tax; many who hated the poll tax voted against the amendments because they thought they opened the way to something worse.

But the fact remains that the Byrd machine lost its fight, and, in politics, it never pays to lose.

Swarming Lobbyists Irk Legislature

By James P. Connolly

THE problem of lobbying at the Maryland Legislature is being studied by the Legislative Council with a view toward bringing the practice under better control—something more easily said than done.

CONNOLLY

However, several suggestions have been received by the council and that body probably will recommend some tightening of the law at the next session of the General Assembly in February.

The council's inquiry is the result of a resolution adopted at the last session early this year. Over the years the lobbyists have become almost as numerous as the legislators and have made themselves almost as much at home in the Statehouse.

There are 152 members of the Assembly and at the last session 126 lobbyists were registered, as required by law. But that is not to say that no more than 126 maneuvered around the meeting. The registration requirement—and, in fact, every other lobby regulation—has been honored more in the breach than in the observance.

It is possible, however, that the lobby finally overreached itself. The lawmakers were not only annoyed but alarmed.

Juicy Race Track Fees

TWO lawyers split a $22,000 fee for beating a bill merging Pimlico and Laurel race tracks. But even that was not the high money mark. In a previous session there was an individual fee of $35,000 in connection with another bill concerning Pimlico.

Consequently, some Assemblymen became apprehensive lest the public jump to the conclusion that the lawmakers themselves were being "bought." The danger of being misjudged made the legislators wary and ready to take a crack at the lobby in general. And, in that mood, they defeated most of the measures that were lobbied at the last session.

The resolution calling for some special attention to the situation was offered by William H. Strohmeyer, Anne Arundel County Democrat, then a Delegate, now a Senator. It was referred to the Legislature's grand inquest committee which recommended interim consideration by the Legislative Council.

A week or so ago the council held a public hearing, received suggestions, and passed them on to its judiciary committee, where they are now. Appearing at the hearing were Attorney General Hall Hammond and William S. Wilson, jr., attorney and legislative counsel for the Baltimore Association of Commerce.

Hammond said the situation needed not more law but more enforcement. The present law not only requires that the lobbyists register but also that they give the names of their employers and the legislation they are interested in.

It further requires that they report all fees and expenses within 30 days after the session. It forbids contingent fees and lobbying on the floor. For better enforcement or supervision, the attorney general advised creation of a joint House and Senate committee.

Wilson complained that State officials and former legislators (of which he is one) are the worst offenders. He also protested against some presiding officers' practice of giving visiting firemen (i.e., officials and former legislators) the privileges of the chamber and the bar.

Have the Know-How

OFFICIALS and former legislators are among the most effective lobbyists because they know the ropes from having been hanging on 'em. And, as Wilson said, offending officials are not always "former." The administration itself has been berated for throwing its executive aides into a hot floor fight. The Governor has the responsibility of recommending legislation but critics have accused him of forcing it.

Breaking lobbying down into four classifications, Hammond defined them frankly as "paid or professional," "intramural," by members, "Olympian," by the executive office (or "the man upstairs" as the Governor is known in the Statehouse) and "press."

Despite the attorney general's opinion that no more law is needed, more was recommended by others—for a hard and fast definition of lobbying, a limit on fees and for cards or credentials so you can tell the lobbyists from the legislators.

If and when the recommendations to curb the lobby come before the Legislature, it's a safe bet the lobby will be there, as usual, lobbying against them.

Jefferson Cut a Swath Through Cherry Trees

Some protesting clubwomen actually chained themselves to cherry trees on the Jefferson Memorial site, but these two decided that the law would serve just as well for an anchor. Park Policeman Carroll Gillespie amiably went along with the gag

Here you see a sorely beset male. He is C. Marshall Finnan, then National Capital Parks superintendent, and he is attempting to pacify a posse of obviously angry women who swarmed to the defense of the cherry trees. After all, he told the 125 ladies who descended on the memorial site that November day, only 86 trees were being removed, and they would be replaced many times over

By Lee Grove

SOME called it "Boylan's Folly." Others described it as "a senile sham," an architectural "leap in the dark."

Others said the Thomas Jefferson Memorial should be a stadium, an auditorium, a planetarium, a health center or a university—something useful.

REP. BOYLAN

As for the Tidal Basin cherry trees, a gift from Japan, people said that to cut any down to make room for the memorial would be an affront to the sensitive Japanese—and would keep away tourists. Organizations filled reams of paper with "Be it Resolveds." Excited women chained themselves to the trees to prevent their removal.

But when President Franklin D. Roosevelt, 10 years ago this Tuesday, formally laid the cornerstone for the memorial, he said it was a shrine "in memory of the many-sided Thomas Jefferson and the ever-present vitality of his type of Americanism."

And last year the memorial to the third President of the United States, the man who drafted the Declaration of Independence, was visited by nearly 538,000 persons; in the first 10 months of this year by 524,654.

Stubborn Jeffersonian

THE shrine was called "Boylan's Folly" because of John Joseph Boylan. Boylan grew up on the sidewalks of New York. A real estate man, a Tammany man, in 1923 he came to Washington as Representative of the Sixteenth New York District, comprising a goodly portion of the midtown West Side.

Boylan had an enthusiasm for Thomas Jefferson. For years he introduced legislation providing for the erection in Washington of a suitable memorial to his hero. Sol Bloom has his Washington and Boylan his Jefferson, people clucked.

Boylan's day came in 1934. Congress approved an act providing for a permanent memorial. The Thomas Jefferson Memorial Commission was created, and Boylan was named chairman.

The talk was of erecting a monument in the apex block of Constitution and Pennsylvania aves. A statue had been the first idea, but somehow ideas grew grandiose. Congress allowed as how three million dollars would be permissible, but not any more, because that was all the Lincoln Memorial had cost.

Other possibilities were mentioned: A building opposite the National Archives on the Mall; a stadium at the foot of East Capitol st.; a memorial structure extending over part of the Tidal Basin.

Basin Gets the Nod

FOLLOWING a closed meeting of the 12-man commission on December 1, 1936, Boylan said, "A majority of us here today favored the Tidal Basin site."

Two designs were considered at the meeting, Boylan said. One design provided for a circular structure, the other for a cross-shaped one. The central feature in either building would be a heroic statue of Jefferson.

The designs were by John Russell Pope, the New York architect who designed the National Gallery of Art, the Archives and Scottish Rite buildings and many others.

The great battle was on immediately, with people wrangling for two years about every aspect of the memorial.

First of all, there was the question of the nature of the memorial. "Practical" people said it should be utilitarian. Boylan said: "It is the universal experience that in such memorials the utilitarian side soon dominates over the commemorative, even to the extent of completely effacing it. Moreover . . . Jefferson, himself, approved the purely commemorative and monumental type."

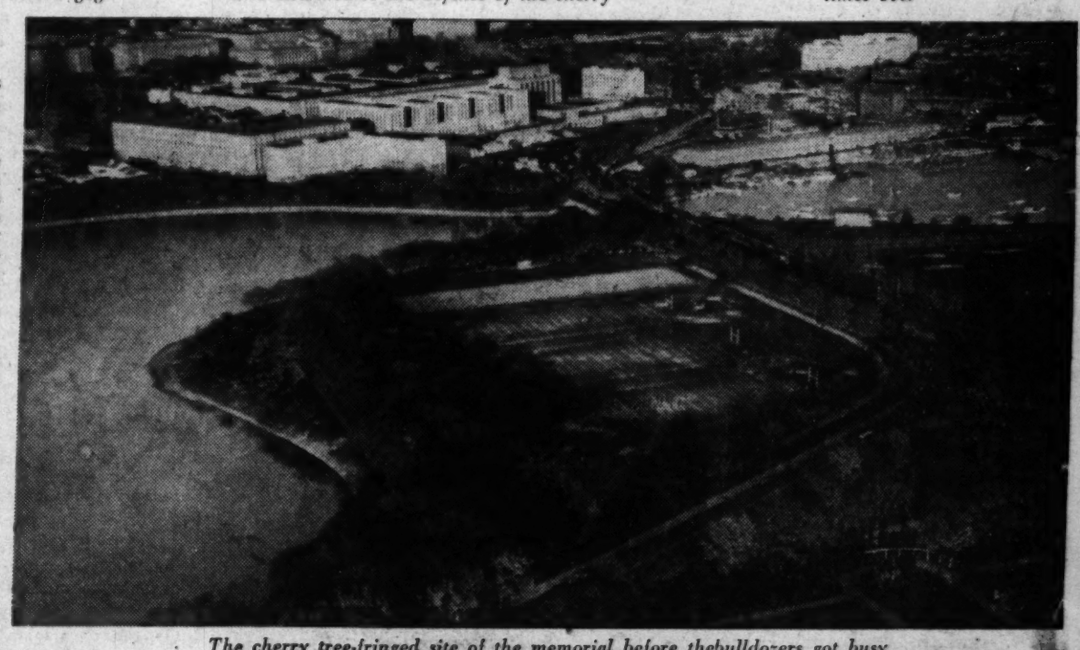
And in this view, Boylan and likethinking members of the commission were supported by President Roosevelt.

Million Percenter

THEN there was the matter of location. Senator Charles L. McNary of Oregon, Senate minority leader and ranking Republican member of the memorial commission, had not been present at the commission's December meeting. He promptly declared he was "one million percent" against a Tidal Basin site. Two other Republican members of the commission agreed with him.

Pope and Boylan had their eyes fixed on the Tidal Basin, however, and never wavered.

They said that four of the five cardinal points of the L'Enfant plan for the city were occupied by the Capitol, White House, Washington Monument and Lincoln Memorial. The Jefferson Memorial would complete the geometrical pattern.



The cherry tree-fringed site of the memorial before thebulldozers got busy

Francis P. Sullivan, chairman of the American Institute of Architects' National Capital Committee, said, "This is an obvious error. The L'Enfant plan does not contemplate any structure at this point, and L'Enfant himself repeatedly stated his purpose of leaving the view of the river from the White House unobstructed."

Elbert Peets, a city planning authority, said, "It is absolutely not a principle of French formal planning to terminate every vista with a solid object."

L'Enfant, sleeping at Arlington, said nothing.

Other critics said that locating the shrine at the Tidal Basin would spoil the informal beauty of West Potomac Park, overload the park with monuments, impair the usefulness of the Tidal Basin as a cleanser of the Washington Channel and cost the District its cherry trees.

Flights of Criticism

ALSO in the category of esthetics was the design of the memorial.

Of the two designs submitted by Pope, President Roosevelt had chosen the circular Pantheonesque plan over the cruciform design adapted from the Villa Rotunda, near Vicenza, Italy. Both designs had been inspired by Jefferson's love of classical architecture.

Neither Jefferson's taste nor Pope's skill impressed the critics, however.

Frederick Law Olmsted, nationally known landscape architect and sole surviving member of the McMillan Park Commission of 1901, said the memorial as designed by Pope was "a leap in the dark with failure more likely than success."

Said Frank Lloyd Wright, "Eclecticism's funeral wreath placed by itself upon its own brow."

Milton Horn, chairman of the American Sculptors Society's cultural committee, said the Pope design was an "imitation of a weak imitation of a culture which even the first imitators did not understand; an affectation which will mark for all time a sense of the superficiality rather than the truth Jefferson sought, and which will remain a disgrace and a blot on this generation."

In July, Boylan announced a compromise plan, to meet objections to the original plan of locating the memorial on an artificial peninsula, with the Tidal Basin divided into three pools and a gridiron of roadways leading to the shrine.

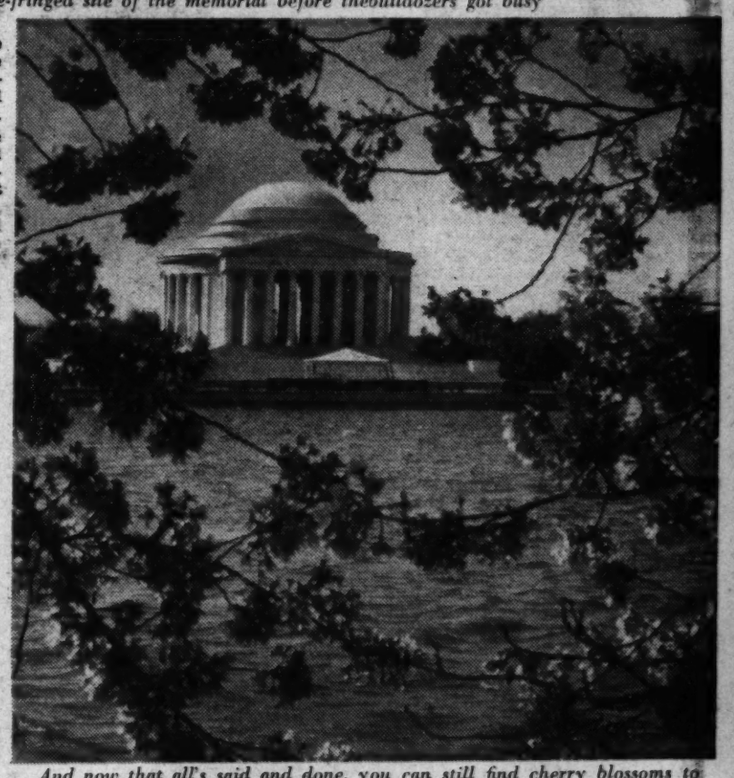
The new location would be a little south and west of the old one, with the memorial structure extending almost to the District approach to Highway Bridge.

Budgetary Difficulties

IN ALL this, money was also a factor, as Boylan and his supporters fought for a $500,000 initial appropriation so that work could be started.

Representative John E. Rankin (D., Miss.) suggested on the House floor that the Supreme Court be moved back into the Capitol and its building converted into a Jefferson Memorial Museum. Someone else suggested renaming the Library of Congress after Jefferson. After all, wasn't President Roosevelt talking about balancing the budget?

The following spring, Boylan announced modifications of the design and a slightly different location. Lashing back at critics of the Pantheon plan, he said, "One may argue that the day for adoption of classical models is over and that the harmony of classical character in the buildings of Washington should be abandoned, but clearly the Jefferson Memorial is not the building with which to begin."



And now that all's said and done, you can still find cherry blossoms to frame a photo of the memorial—in season, of course

Pope had died in August, 1937, but Boylan was still fighting.

On May 18, 1938, President Roosevelt and Boylan conferred, and the Chief Executive gave his support to the Jefferson Memorial Commission's renewed effort to secure the initial $500,000 appropriation.

The next day Gilmore D. Clarke, chairman of the Fine Arts Commission, made headlines with the disclosure that his group did not approve of this "solution of Pope's." Clarke urged "an exhaustive and thoroughly adequate study of the whole situation."

Boylan, veteran of New York City politics, fought back. The powers of the Fine Arts Commission are purely advisory, he said. Further, "Congress and the Nation want a Jefferson Memorial, and want it now, and they are not going to tolerate attempts to defeat such a memorial by proposals of further delay."

In June, Congress appropriated the funds.

Death Cheats Warrior

REPRESENTATIVE BOYLAN did not live to see President Roosevelt break ground for the memorial on December 15, 1938.

He had died October 6.

He had lived through the frenzied 1937 campaign to "save the cherry trees," whose destruction would have been necessary to his original plan. Those were the days when the Board of Trade, citizens' associations, women's groups, professional and business groups all rallied to the defense of the trees.

He had lived through a repetition of the same battle in 1938, when the appropriation measure was again in the legislative mill and only a part of the trees were affected.

But he did not live to see the last flare-up—the November day in 1938 when there was a meeting at Dupont circle presided over by the State vice regent of the Daughters of the American Revolution, the director of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, the presidents of the District Congress of Parent-Teachers Associations and Federation of Women's Clubs—after which two score of the ladies descended on the White House to voice their protest.

Nor did Boylan see the following day, when 150 Washington clubwomen succeeded in putting a stop to the transplanting for a day—many by shackling themselves to the trees. Nor did the Congressman hear the President intimate that the women had been "flimflammed" by a local anti-Administration newspaper.

Maybe the President agreed with Representative Joseph B. Shannon (D., Mo.). The year before, Shannon had said that the cherry blossom question "might well be brushed aside."

"Let us analyze these trees," he said. "They cannot correctly be called cherry trees, because they bear no cherries. Once a year, they blossom forth, but their blossoms have no fragrance . . . I say that Jefferson would waste no time lamenting the loss of caponized trees that bear no fruit and the blossoms of which have no scent. The work on the memorial to this great man should not be delayed by such flimsy objections."

In fact, some types do have a scent.

On April 13, 1943—200th anniversary of the birth of Jefferson—President Roosevelt dedicated the white marble shrine where Rudulph Evans' 19-foot bronze statue of the Sage of Monticello now stands, with his back to his native Virginia and his face to the Capital of the Nation which he did so much to mold.

Cadets Edge Penn On Mackmull Kick

Philadelphia, Nov. 12 (AP).—Army ran its unbeaten string to 19 games today by edging underdog Pennsylvania, 14 to 13, in a football melodrama that was settled by Jack Mackmull's unerring placement kicks.

Pennsylvania, bottling up Army's great quarterback, Arnold Galiffa, twice came within bare yards of additional touchdowns.

The vast throng of 78,000 that jammed Franklin Field stayed to the bitter end of the cold, gloomy day and it was really bitter for on the final play of the game the Army and Penn teams almost started a free-for-all.

Coaches and officials broke up the battle before it go too serious.

Pennsylvania, expected to lose by three touchdowns to the Nation's number two team, scored first on a 78-yard drive in the second period with Bob Deuber smashing 1 yard for the touchdown.

Herb Agocs, the big Penn end who played a mighty defensive game, sent his try for extra point far wide of the goal posts and this proved to be the deciding factor.

Army struck back immediately with a 64-yard march with Jom Cain carrying over irom the 5, and added its second touchdown in the third period with a 67-yard march, Gil Stephenson counting on a 2-yard dive. Both times Mackmull sent the ball squarely between the posts.

Pennsylvania came back with a 77-yard push in the last period, and this time it was a 9-yard pass, Francis (Reds) Bagnell to Warren Horton that did it.

It was Pennsylvania's big line that took a lot of lustre off an Army team expected to run up a big score on the twice-beaten Quakers. Form, however, has never run true with these two sharp rivals. Last year Army won in the last 30 seconds, 26-20, and the year before the Cadets were tied 7-7 by Penn.

Pennsylvania made 23 first downs to 10 for Army and twice put on drives that folded tragically.

At the close of the first half, Penn took a punt on Army's 45 and Bagnell whipped three passes to End Harry Wettlaufer, the last of which, for 11 yards, put the ball 1 yard from Army's goal as the second hand of the clock almost reached the mark that would end the half.

Clock Checks Quakers

Pennsylvania immediately called for time out in an effort to run one more play, but the officials refused to allow it since Penn already had its full quota of four times out for the half. The crowd booed and groaned.

Then in last period, with the score 14-13, Penn pounced on a midfield fumble by Jim Cain and

Navy Routs Columbia For 3d Win

Thompson Stadium, Annapolis, Nov. 12.—Some very doubtful moments were undergone by Naval Academy rooters here today before their favored Middies, with a four-touchdown parade in the last half, blasted Columbia's Lions, 340.

General Eisenhower, president of Columbia, was among the estimated 18,000 spectators who sat through an exciting faternoon to see the Lions drop their sixth straight game while Navy was bringing its season record to three victories, four losses and a tie.

For 2½ periods there was a chance for Columbia to erupt and win the affair at any time. The Academy held a 6-0 lead after that amount of struggling, but it didn't look very permanent.

Trips to the Columbia 6 and 8-yard lines gave fans in Blue a lot to cheer about but failed to remove the big zero after Navy on the scoreboard. Finally Halfback Duff Arnold ran a punt back to the Navy 45 and the hosts did something about the 21 points by which they were supposed to beat Columbia.

Arnold, Frankie Hauff and Dave Bannerman shared rushing duties in an 8-play onslaught to the Columbia three, and from there Bannerman slipped through left guard

Yankee Stadium, New York, Nov. 12.—The incredible and the inevitable happened here today.

To the utter astonishment of 67,000 Yankee Stadium witnesses, North Carolina held Notre Dame to a 6-6 deadlock for almost three quarters.

And then, to the surprise of no one, the super team from South Bend exploded, blasting out 36 points in 22 minutes for its thirty-fifth straight victory, achieved by a score of 42 to 6.

Throttled and even embarrassed for 2½ periods by the hellishly determined invaders from tobaccoland, the Irish finally hit their stride and made their first New York appearance in three years a howling success.

Halfback Billy Barrett, 19-year-old sophomore from Chicago, provided Notre Dame's subway alumni with their biggest thrills by scoring three touchdowns, twice in the fourth period, when the Irish registered 27 points.

But the 180-pound swiftie didn't have all the heroics to himself. There was Quarterback Bobby Williams, Baltimore's contribution to Leahy's Lancers, who passed for three touchdowns, and Halfback Frank Spaniel, who zoomed for two touchdowns, one on a dazzling 77-yard sprint, and Fullback Mike Swistowicz, who electrified the big town gathering with an 85-yard touchdown run on a pass interception.

And up front, there were none better today than Notre Dame's great all-American end, 240-pound Leon Hart, and Tackle Jim Martin. They virtually alone put an end to Carolina's running game, restricting the Tar Heels to a mere 45 yards on the ground.

But the Tar Heels, too, had their shining knights. Tackle Dave Wiley, for instance. It was he who blocked William's punt in the first two minutes of the game to set up the Tar Heel touchdown that electrified the Irish and the football world.

Sophomore Tackle Dick Kuhn, End Ken Powell and Center Irv Holdash were downright briliant on the defense for three quarters.

With their all-America tailback, Charlie Justice, restricted to the bench with an ankle injury except for two token appearances, Tailback Dick Bunting and Fullback Billy Hales, an Arlington, Va., lad, supplied what little offense the Tar Heels had today.

Bunting crashed over for the North Carolina touchdown and Hayes, twisting and squirming, sparked a second-quarter Carolina sally that went to the Irish 6 before it was halted.

Justice, hobbled by an ankle injury received in last week's victory over William and Mary, came in to hold the ball for Abie Williams' attempt to convert after the Carolina score: Justice returned only lina score: Choo Choo bobbled the pass from center and Williams missed the kick. Justice returned only for a second in the third quarter.

It was a bitter disappointment to the 24-year-old senior not to be able to achieve a lifetime ambition of playing before a Yankee Stadium audience and his loss also was a bitter blow to the Tar Heels' chances of upending the Irish.

With a hale and hearty Justice, North Carolina would have had a better chance of trying to do what is beginning to appear impossible—beating Notre Dame. But without him even their remote chance for a stunning upset was considerably reduced.

It was the first time in 93 football games over an 11-year period that the talented triple-threat Choo-Choo couldn't even go part of the way, much less all the way.

North Carolina had nothing to be ashamed of today. It simply ran out of gas midway in the third period, long after the Southerners were supposed to have been demolished.

Cox, Self Set Dazzling Pace

By Herb Heft
Post Reporter

Duke's Blue Devils sicked Billy Cox and Joe Self on George Washington and their demon passing left the Colonials confused and beaten, 35-0, yesterday before 9283 at Griffith Stadium.

Wallace Wade's single wing eleven, noted for its grand ground attack, set an all-time Blue Devil passing record with 31 aerial tries.

Cox, the Mount Airy, N. C., junior who was playing with his left arm in a cast, reared with his right back and completed 9 out of 16 before taking a seat on the bench in the third quarter.

He passed to one touchdown, ran 43 yards for a second and set up two others with his passing and running. Self, Cox's third-string understudy who didn't even rate his name of the program, passed for a fourth quarter touchdown and by the end of the game had 8 completions out of 15.

Shut out for the first time this season, the Colonials were listless and uninspired. Apparently with an eye toward next week's Georgetown game, G. W. Coach Bo Rowland kept two of his slightly injured regulars, Blocking Back Stan

Kivus and Mattingly Share Honors as Hoyas Win Fifth

By Jack Walsh
Post Reporter

Denver, Colo., Nov. 12.—Georgetown found the rarified air here today heady indeed, rolling to a 28-13 victory over Denver U. that was more convincing than it sounds.

A silent hometown crowd of 14,168 that made it seem the game was being played in a vacuum saw Soph Frank Mattingly discover that the 5400-foot altitude didn't hurt his passing a bit.

The lanky Lexington Park, Md., lad hit Billy Conn for a 29-yard scoring pass in the first period and threw a 28-yard touchdown toss to End Bob Noppinger in the second. His eight-yard end-zone completion to End Desmond was nullified by a penalty.

Sharing honors with Mattingly was capable Jack Kivus. This was the day Coach Bob Margarita decided to let Kivus run. The quiet Mankato, Minn., senior showed that he was properly appreciative.

Kivus bucked eight yards for the score that gave the Hoyas a 21-0 halftime lead, their best 30-minute offensive display of the season.

In the third period the 160-pounder, who has been used principally on defense, broke loose on a spectacular 33-yard scoring sprint, diving into the end zone hard by the sideline flag.

Kivus outgained Billy Conn for the day, picking up 102 yards in 18 tries. Conn was much in evidence, although rested more than usual. In addition to his scoring

Cornell's Streak Broken

Dartmouth Trips Big Red, 16 to 7

By Bill King

Hanover, N. H., Nov. 12 (AP). — With their supposedly inferior linemen performing in inspired fashion and Johnny Clayton passing with deadly accuracy, the Dartmouth Indians toppled mighty Cornell out of the undefeated ranks with a spectacular 16-7 victory today before 17,000, the largest football crowd in this ancient college town's history.

The Ithacans, who had reeled off 12 unbeaten games in a row since bowing to Army last season, opened in savage fashion and chalked up an early touchdown on a 44-yard pass launched by Hilary Chollet to Winger Walt Bruska.

Chollet made that long heave after taking a lateral from Pete Dorset, the Cornell passing threat.

That setback was a blessing in disguise for the Indians, who promptly settled down and outplayed their Ivy League rivals the remainder of the game.

Early in the second period Fullback Herb Carey scored the first Dartmouth points by nailing Chollet in his end zone for a safety. Cornell had taken a punt on its 17 and had been set back to its 2 by a penalty.

Shortly after Carey intercepted a Dorset pass on Dartmouth's 43 and returned it to Cornell's 27.

Bob Tyler banged 2 yards and

Redskins Play Eagles Today At Stadium

The largest crowd of their season, perhaps as many as 35,000 fans, will be in the Griffith Stadium stands today to see the Washington Redskins take on the mighty Philadelphia Eagles in a 2 o'clock National Football League game.

Actually, many of the customers won't be there to see the Redskins at all. Like baseball fans who attend Nats games to watch the opposition, these grid enthusiasts will be around for the sole purpose of viewing the world-champion Eagles.

On paper it doesn't figure to be much of a contest. The Eagles already boast a 49-14 edge on the Tribe. They've lost only one of seven games so far and lead the eastern division by two games.

All of which makes Coach Greasy Neal's gang a 3-touchdown favorite.

But there are those who like the Redskins' chances very much, indeed. They point out that Washington, with a 3-3-1 record and holding fourth place in the East, should go into the game as "loose" as a team can be. It has nothing to lose, but still smarts from that bitter earlier loss.

The advent of a new head coach, Herman Ball, figures not to hurt the Tribe's chances in the least. The T-formation student starts his regime under the most difficult circumstances, but is the sort who can be expected to make it inter-

West Virginia In 13-All Tie

Morgantown, W. Va., Nov. 12 (AP).—West Virginia University finally cracked the scoring column in the last half today to register a 13-13 tie with Texas Western.

A crowd of 10,000 watched Bill Chesak crack over from the 1 for the first Texas touchdown, ending a 49-yard march. A second quarter six-pointer came on a 62-yard run by Jim Hammond.

An 18-yard pass from Jimmy Walthall to Clarence Cox on the goal line enabled West Virginia to score within the third period.

Walt Malyk plunged two yards for the other WVU tally in the final quarter. Stan McLaughlin's recovery of a Chesak fumble on the Texas Western 23 paved the way.

Jim Davis converted after the first Texas score, while Gene Simmons' dropkick after the second WVU touchdown was perfect.

Pearson Paces 18th Win in Row

By Skipper Patrick

Columbia, Mo., Nov. 12 (AP).—Oklahoma's methodical football powerhouse bulldozed to its second straight Big Seven Conference football championship today, 27-7, over an undermanned but stubborn Missouri Tiger eleven.

An all-time record Missouri home crowd of 37,152 jammed Memorial Stadium for the battle of the split-T offensive specialists. Oklahoma rolled to its eighteenth successive victory, losing to Santa Clara in a 1948 opener.

The victory gave Oklahoma a perfect Big Seven record of 5-0 and charged Missouri with its first league defeat.

A morning rain ceased shortly before the opening kickoff and although the turf was slow, footing was fairly fast. Each team recovered three fumbles, but none of the miscues figured in the scoring.

Oklahoma broke a scoreless, bruising battle in the second quarter with Halfback Lindell Pearson going over from the three for his first of two touchdowns in the period.

Ken Tipps kicked the point for Oklahoma. Missouri hurried back to knot the count at 7-7, on little Phil Klein's 14-yard pass into the end zone to Fred Hulse. Johny Glorioso kicked the point, last of the day for Missouri.

Oklahoma engineered another touchdown before the half ended, and again it was Pearson, this time from the two after a sustained drive of 69 yards.

The Sooners wound up their scoring in the third, Pearson passing 7 yards to End Frankie Anderson for six points and Fullback Leon Heath slugging through from 4 yards out for the other counter.

The Sooners tied the all-time victory streak of 18 games set by Oklahoma beginning in 1914 and ending in 1916. Today's defeat also was the first home loss for Missouri since losing to Oklahoma in 1947.

Walker Leads SMU, 34-6

Dallas, Texas, Nov. 12 (AP).—Doak Walker blasted Arkansas into a 34-6 defeat today as Southern Methodist clung to a bare chance of the Southwest Conference football championship.

Walker scored three touchdowns and passed for another in a typical show. He also booted three extra points.

A crowd of 42,000 roared approval of the All-American's mighty play.

Second-stringers made the final Southern Methodist counter against a hard-fighting but sometimes confused Arkansas team.

The Methodists stormed to 240 yards on the ground and 177 passing to thoroughly pulverize the Razorbacks.

Southern Methodist's victory today not only kept the Mustangs in the conference race but flamed their bowl ambitions high.

Wake Forest Is Upset by N. C. State

Raleigh, N. C., Nov. 12 (AP).—An aroused North Carolina State football team scored a stunning 27-to-14 upset victory over Wake Forest's demon Deacons in a Southern Conference game here today.

A crowd of 20,000 saw the game. The Wolfpack got a 3-touchdown advantage over its traditional rival in the first 10 minutes of play and then held off every attempt of the Deacons to score a comeback.

A trio of State backs—Tailback Ed Mooney, Fullback Jim O'Rourke and Halfback Bill Thompson—were the big guns in State's first quarter splurge.

Blocking Back Bob Bowlby was the Wolfpack hero in the final minutes, however, as he intercepted two Deacon passes. He ran one of these 25 yards for a touchdown to sew up the State victory.

Wake Forest had been favored by two to three touchdowns over a State team that had been able to run up only two victories this season.

State needed only three scrimmage plays and three minutes to score its first touchdown. The drive carried 61 yards.

The second score came a little more than a minute later when Guard Charlie Musser blocked Fullback Bob Price's attempted punt. Center Tom Tofaute scooped up the ball and ran 25 yards for the score. Price was slow in getting off his kick because of a bad pass from center.

Five minutes later State had another score at the end of a 67-yard drive. O'Rourke and Mooney alternated with gains for a first down on the Deacon 46. Mooney went back to pass, saw no receivers and ran 16 yards to the 30. Then Mooney passed to Thompson for the score.

No Longer Winless

V. P. I. Tops Richmond, 28-13, Ending 2-Year Losing Streak

Richmond, Va., Nov. 12 (AP).—Virginia Tech's winless wonders won a football game today. Through two long years, the Gobblers took the field 18 successive times without gaining more than a tie. But today, they strode into football's blue chips by conquering the University of Richmond, 28-13.

Seven thousand fans watched the Southern Conference battle.

After the Gobblers got rolling in the second period, there semed little doubt about the outcome although once Richmond pulled up to within a point 14-13, of the winless wonders.

Ron Casto, Tech end, scored twice, pulling down 38-yard and 17-yard flips from Fisher. Dave Thomas, Gobbler fullback, ran for five yards and another touchdown. The final Gobbler score came on Sterling Wingo's 53-yard burst through the line.

The Spiders went ahead in the second period when End Aubrey Rosser took Joe Purinal's four-yard pass. Purinal tallied the other Spider touchdown in the third on a one-foot plunge.

Tech's last victory came in November, 1947, and was a 26-14 triumph over this same Richmond squad.

Georgia Rally Ties Auburn

Columbus, Ga., Nov. 12 (U.P.).—Two backs from the North whose earlier mistakes almost caused disaster brought Georgia back to a thrilling 20-to-20 tie with Auburn today in one of the classic games of a 53-year-old rivalry.

Sophomore Quarterback Mal Cook, a giant passer from Dracut, Mass., and Senior Halfback Floyd Reid of Hamilton, Ohio, hauled the Bulldogs 40 yards in two plays in the fading minutes to earn a deadlock before 22,000 fans.

Trailing 20 to 13, Georgia got the ball on a fumble at Auburn's 40. Then Cook faked a pass and ambled like an angry elephant to the Auburn 20. Reid broke off tackle and fought his way savagely all 20 yards to score. Bob Walston, another Ohioan, booted the tying extra point.

Auburn, a 13-point underdog, became violently efficient two minutes after the opening kickoff when Dickie Flournoy recovered Reid's fumble at the Georgia 48. Travelin' Travis Tidwell whipped a looping touchdown pass to Russell.

A few seconds later, Reid fumbled the ball and Ralph Pyburn recovered. On the first play Tidwell appeared trapped. Nevertheless he leaped high and threw to Bobby Golden in the end zone for another touchdown.

Salem Paces 'Bama, 20-7

Birmingham, Ala., Nov. 12 (AP).—Alabama's star halfback, Eddie Salem, gladdened the hearts of a home-town crowd of 43,000 today as he paced his team to a 20-7 win from arch-rival Georgia Tech.

Salem, former high school star here, broke the Tech defense with a 28-yard gallop in the third period which led to 'Bama's first score. He made the touchdown a few seconds later from 5 yards out.

He also scored the clincher, late in the final period, on a 3-yard plunge.

Until Salem broke away in the third period, Tech generally held the upper hand. The invaders scored in the second period on a 31-yard pass from Buster Humphreys to End Dick Harvin, who made a great jump and catch in the end zone.

Salem engineered the tying touchdown in just two minutes of the third period. 'Bama went ahead on a 35-yard drive 10 minutes later. After Fullback Tom Calvin and Salem had ground out a first down, Butch Avinger passed to Lary for 25 yards and the score.

California Wins 9th in Row, 41-14

By Russ Newland

Berkeley, Calif., Nov. 12 (AP).—California's Bears charged into the home stretch of a perfect football season and within eyesight of the Rose Bowl today with a thumping 41 to 14 victory over the University of Oregon Ducks.

One of the largest crowds of the season, 76,000 fans, saw Lynn Waldorf's Bears come from behind to rack up their ninth consecutive triumph of the year, and remain the only undefeated, untied team in the Coast Conference. The Bears scored three touchdowns in two minutes of the third quarter to cinch it.

Oregon turned an intercepted pass into a first period touchdown and held on to lead the surprised Bears going into the second quarter. The advantage ended there.

The Bears took possession on their own eleven and passed and pounded 98 yards to score. Quarterback Bob Celeri threw a 7-yard touchdown pass to left end Dan Begovich.

Jim Cullom missed the placement and the Bears still trailed 7-6. They came back to go 51 yards for the second touchdown. Right Half Jim Monachino carried the ball 42 yards in three tries, going over from the two.

Halfback Paul Baldwin took a punt and raced 68 yards later in the second period for the third California touchdown.

Oregon got back with a touchdown just before the half ended. De Wayne Johnson intercepted a pass and returned 29 to the California seven. Quarterback Earl Stelle passed to Woodley Lewis who ran three yards for the score. Chet Daniels placekicked.

Williams Wins Little Three Title

Williamstown, Mass., Nov. 12 (AP).—Williams College, paced by the two-touchdown scoring of Fullback Don Kulsar, won the "Little Three" football championship by defeating Amherst, 19-13, today. Kulsar also set up the third Williams score with a long run.

Ted Naiman tallied on a short buck and passed to Moose McGrath for the A mherst touchdowns.

National Arena Skaters Win

National Arena's roller racing team won its third successive match from Alexandria Arena's skaters at Alexandria Rink last night, 105-35.

Winners of the events were: Miss and out, Juan Bonini (N.); one mile open, Bill Conner (N.); half-mile handicap, Bill Borum (N.); 5-mile team relay, Alexandria (John Bernhard and Vern Wagner); one mile women's handicap, Mary Thompson.

Fort Meade Golf Match

A 16-man golf team representing Fort George G. Meade will play a team from the University of Maryland on Sunday on the 18-hole course at Fort Meade.

Underdogs Win

Mich. State Blows 13-0 Lead, Bows to Oregon State, 25-20

Portland, Oreg., Nov. 12 (AP).—The chest and toe of Stan McGuire and the long legs of Ken Carpenter carried the underdog Oregon State Beavers to a spectacular 25-20 football victory today over the mighty Spartans of Michigan State College.

Oregon State was expected to provide no more than an interesting workout for the Spartans, who have been rated highly in the national gridiron picture.

Before a crowd of 22,239, Michigan State dominated the scoreless first period, and scored twice early in the second stanza. With the count at 13-0, against them, the Beavers had made just three yards from scrimmage. Then Coach Kip Taylor's Beavers lashed by land and air to cover 59 yards in eight plays and leave the score 13-7 at halftime.

With the start of the second half, the Beavers smashed another 59 yards on seven plays to tie the score, and it remained at 13 all when Stan McGuire missed a placement try for the first time this season.

McGuire made up for his miss a few moments later, by kicking a field goal 42 yards to give the Beavers a 16-13 edge. The line of scrimmage was on the 22, but the kick actually traveled 20 additional yards.

And McGuire refused to stay out of the Spartans' hair. Shortly after Michigan State received the kickoff, he swarmed down on Everett Grandelius to block a punt, the ball rolling beyond the end zone for a safety.

The angered Spartans kicked out, and got back into the picture when Lynn Chadnois hauled down a Beaver pass and rambled 51 yards to the O.S.C. 9. Two plays later, he swept left end for 8 yards and a counter that put Michigan State back into the lead. George Smith kicked his second conversion to make it 20-18.

A weak punt, which gave Oregon State the ball on the enemy 32, set up the winning touchdown. The Beavers worked down to the 5. Carpenter ran around the short side of the Michigan State side and, with two tacklers hanging onto his legs, threw himself into the end zone for a touchdown.

Early Rice Thrusts Top Texas A. & M.

Houston, Texas, Nov. 12 (AP).—Two scampering halfbacks and a stout second-half defense gave the Rice Owls a 13-0 victory over Texas A. & M. today before a capacity crowd of 31,000. It was Rice's fourth consecutive Southwest Conference victory in as many starts.

Sophomore Halfback Billy Burkhalter climaxed first-half drives of 64 and 41 yards by plunging one yard for both touchdowns. End James (Froggie) Williams missed the first extra point try, but kicked the second.

Passes by Tobin Rote did most of the damage for the second tally, late in the second period. But it was the running of Burkhalter and Halfback Sonny Wyatt that caused the Aggies most of their misery.

Wyoming Win Streak Snapped by Baylor

Waco, Tex., Nov. 12 (AP).—Baylor methodically ruined Wyoming's undefeated, untied record today, 32-8, as an 88-yard touchdown run by Bobby Griffin broke. When the 175-pound Houston senior gathered in Eddie Talboom's pass on his own 12-yard line in the third period and ran it back all the way, Wyoming wilted.

The Bears used passing to set up three of their five touchdowns, but scored all on the ground. Wyoming's lone tally came at the end of a 10-play, 55-yard march on the ground. Walker Jones climaxed it by scoring from the 2-yard line.

Oklahoma Aggies Romp in Final Period, Win 26-14

Manhattan, Kans., Nov. 12 (AP).—Oklahoma A&M depending on an aerial attack engineered mainly by Martin Riley, put on a last quarter scoring spree here today to overtake Kansas State, 26 to 14, on a muddy football field before 13,000 fans.

Riley scored two of the Cowpokes' touchdowns in the fourth period and passed to Arlen McNeil for one in the first.

Coach Ralph Graham's Wildcats gained twice as much distance on the ground as the Oklahomans but A. & M. passed profusely if not so accurately at times.

Nebraska Beats Iowa State, 7-0

Ames, Iowa, Nov. 12 (AP).—Little Harry McGinnis darted 70 yards on a punt return today to give Nebraska a 7-0 victory over Iowa State.

The touchdown spurt by the former Big Seven Conference sprint champion came in pelting rain in the third period. That telling blow stunned the Cyclones. Although the air arm of Bill Weeks was virtually grounded by the weather and alert Nebraska defense, Iowa State had controlled the contest up to McGinnis' run.

Terps' Late Drive Tops Boston, 14-13

the most ferocious. Boston U., battling to protect its unbeaten record, threw a tremendous attack at Maryland's vaunted defenses, but two touchdowns and a missed conversion weren't enough.

Maryland became the first team this season to check the scoring proclivities of Boston's Harry Agganis, who in every previous game had thrown at least one touchdown pass. Today there were no touchdowns among the 9 passes he completed in 13 attempts. None of them could he make go all the way.

Maryland Coach Jim Tatum switched to Lavine in the fourth quarter despite the fact it was Quarterback Joe Tucker who engineered a 73-yard Maryland touchdown surge in the second period. Lavine found valuable allies in Earl Roth, supposedly only a punting specialist, and Ed (Big Mo.) Modzelewski, in the winning drive.

From the Maryland 19, where Vern Siebert took a punt by Agganis, the Terrapins launched their decisive parade. Lavine, imperturbable, calmly mixed passing with a ground attack, and handed off to oRth for a 16-yard gain through center taht carried the ball to midfield. Again he handed off to Roth for a 10-yard surge through center, and then he switched to Big Mo.

On a hand-off, Modzelewski ripped 18 yards off Maryland's left tackle to the Boston 26, then Lavine teamed with Big Mo for an important 9-yard gain. It was a pass on which Modzelewski made a circus catch. First he leaped to bat the heave upwards, then he recouped it with a shoestring catch on the Boston 17. Lavine sneaked the ball to a first-down on the B. U. 16.

Ice-Water Daring

With ice-water daring, Lavine dashed wide two plays later and got rid of the ball on a lateral to Modzelewski that netted a first down on the 6. Tatum moved Johnny Idzik into the game with instructions, and Idzik took a hand-off from Lavine t othe B. U. 1-yard line. Lavine took it over, one play later, and Dean kicked the winning point.

Seven minutes of play remained, and kick-off man Dean put B. U. in an immediate hole with a boot that bounded virtually on the Boston 4-yard line, where Jake Rowden smeared Bobby Whelan. Ray Krouse, Maryland's All-America tackle candidate, blunted B. U. hopes of a rally by rushing Agganis on a pass attempt, and Johnny Idzik forced the Terriers to punt by nailing Whelan for a 2-yard loss on third down.

For the last 5 minutes of play, Lavine smartly controlled the ball. On a daring pitchout after he was tackled, he lateraled to Modzelewski for a 7-yard gain on which Big Mo made an equally daring shoestring catch. Eventually Maryland penetrated to the Boston 20, with Roulette smashing for 15 yards through center.

Stalls for Time

With a minute to play, Lavine stalled for time magnificently, squeezing the ball on three consecutive plays after being hemmed in on passing attempts.

Maryland at that point seemed intent on another touchdown to impress the bowl scouts who were present, and Lavine was on an optional spree—either to pass or take a loss. He took three consecutive losses that finally killed the clock.

The B. U. team that had averaged 40 points per game against second-rate opposition, discovered early that it had moved up in class when Maryland checked a 55-yard drive in the first quarter on the Terrapins' 25. Agganis completed two passes to his favorite target, End George Sulima, but Maryland's two guards, Bob Ward and Chester Gierula, called a halt by slowing up and downing, respectively, B. U.'s Charley Kent, on a third-down handoff. The drive stalled when Gierula rushed Agganis on a fourth-down pass.

Maryland was solving nicely the sliding, accordion-T of the Terriers, and, after taking over the ball on its own 23 late in the opening quarter when Heath intercepted a pass in the flat, launched a 77-yard march of its own.

Joe Tucker quarterbacked that surge. He wafted a wide pitchout to Big Mo, a running fool today, and Modzelewski outsprinted two tacklers on the sidelines, cut back and completed a 38-yard gain before he was tackled from behind. Tucker, harried on another passing attempt finally got away a heave to Fox that carried to the Boston 25, and the Terps had a first down on the B. U. 20 as the quarter ended.

On the first play of the second quarter, Tucker found a target in Modzelewski who maneuved into the middle of the B. U. secondary and took a heave for a first down on the Boston 3, for a 15-yard gain. Big Mo was stopped inches short of a touchdown on a drive at center but on the next play Tucker sneaked it over, and Dean kicked the seventh point.

Seven minutes later, Maryland's 7-0 lead dwindled to 7-6, on a B. U. touchdown that got its start when John Toner made a freak interception of a pass that Tucker aimed at Modzelewski. Big Mo juggled the ball, first with his hands, then contacted it with his feet. It rolled off his toe into the hands of Toner on the B. U. 43.

From that point, Agganis sent Whelan around the flanks, a maneuver on which the Terrapin defenses were outsped most of the day, and he got a first down on the Maryland 29. Agannis, trapped on a pass attempt, ran the ball nine yards to the Maryland 18, and the Terrapins drew an added penalty because of defensive holding.

The referee paced off the 15 yards and eventually set the ball down, a B. U. first on the Maryland 3. Wingate stopped Kent on his first lunge, but one play later, Kent barged through right guard for the touchdown.

When Dell 'Olio attempted the conversion, Vern Siebert lunged in from his defensive halfback post and neatly blocked the kick, to leave B. U. trailing, 7-6, in the clever maneuver that eventually decided the game.

The half ended, 7-6, but only after Maryland checked a 40-yard Boston U. drive that took the ball to the Maryland 16. Whelan skirted the Maryland ends, and on an end-around play Sulima carried to the Maryland 26. Maryland took over the ball when Agganis failed with a pass, and also with a trick-play pass to Heller, a tackle, who was made eligible by a maneuver in the B. U. line.

Lavine was the apparent goat of the ball game before he emerged as one of its heroes. That was in the third quarter when he threw a pass that Agganis intercepted on the Maryland 45. He aimed the heave at Big Mo, who wound up making the tackle after Agganis snared the ball. With passes to Oates and Sulima in the flat, Agganis moved the ball to a first down on the Maryland seven, and another B. U. touchdown seemed imminent.

But at that point, Whelan after taking a wide pitchout from Agganis, streaked all the way to the two-yard line and fumbled when he was hit by Guard Hugh McQuade who played a smashing game all day. The ball rolled free into the end zone and Siebert fell on it to convert the B. U. touchdown drive into a touchback.

But the Terriers were back pounding at the goal Maryland was defending a minute later when Roth's fourth-down punt was blocked by Anderson. The ball came down in the arms of Tackle John Knight, who was down on the Maryland 32. Roth, the kicker, wound up making the tackle.

Two plays later, the speedy Whelan circled left end, outsped the Maryland flanker defense and went 29 yards to a touchdown, ripping away from Wingate's grip on his jersey at the Maryland five-yard line. Dell' Olio kicked the point that moved the Terriers in front 13-7, at 8:45 of the third quarter.

Alerted to the passing proclivities of Agganis, Coach Jim Tatum of Maryland played a five-man line throughout the game, and permitted Agganis to complete his short passes into the flat. But his elastic defenses covered all of Agganis down-field receivers.

Only around the ends could Agganis shake his ball carriers loose, chiefly Whelan, and it was at the flanks that B. U. amassed most of its 252 yards rushing, against the 195 of Maryland, in contrast. It was the Terapins' surges through the middle, by Modzelewski, Shemonski and Roth, that picked up most of their yardage.

Trinity Breaks 13-Year Win Famine

Hartford, Vonn., Nov. 12 (U.P.).—Unbeaten, untied Trinity resorted to passes today to defeat Wesleyan for the first time in 13 years, 7 to 6, before some 8500 fans at Trinity Field. It was Trinity's seventh straight victory.

In the rivalry which goes back 64 years, Trinity had not won a Wesleyan game since 1936, when it came through with a 9-to-7 triumph.

Bye Paces Gophers

Minnesota Bowls Over Pitt, 24 to 7

Pittsburgh, Nov. 12 (AP).—Fleet Billy Bye popped like a wraith from a giant Minnesota forward wall before 42,515 fans today to lead the Gophers to a 24-7 victory over the University of Pittsburgh.

The 180-pound Anoka, Minn., halfback raced over for two touchdowns and passed for a third.

Bye slanted off tackle from 5 yards out in the second period for the first Minnesota touchdown. He ran 29 yards later in the same stanza for another to run Minnesota's lead to 14-0 at the half.

Then the stubborn Pitt Panthers threatened to make things interesting in the last half by unfurling a passing attack for a touchdown. But Bye returned to the game and flipped a perfect pass to Quarterback Jim Malosky for the score which put the game safely beyond Pitt's reach.

The final Minnesota points came on a 15-yard field goal by End Gordon Soltau in the fading minutes of the game. This boot made a perfect kicking day for the big end as he also spun placements through the uprights after each touchdown.

The fourth-down field goal came as Pitt gallantly threw Minnesota back after the Gophers negotiated a first down on the Panther 2 in a long march from their own 15.

Karras Sets Conference Rush Record

Columbus, Ohio, Nov. 12 (AP).—Ohio State's battering Bucks, frustrated by a stalwart Illinois crew during the first half, exploded for 30 points in the late-going today to snatch a 30-17 conquest before a crowd of 81,085.

The Big Ten victory moved Coach Wes Fesler's versatile crew a bit nearer a Rose Bowl bid and the Western Conference title—only Michigan next week now standing in their path.

The underdog Illini fought off the first three Buckeye bids for touchdowns, throwing back three surges to the goalpost shadows while constructing a 10-point lead in the first half on a rugged 80-yard ground march and a 12-yard field goal by Sam Rebecca.

Even in defeat, sophomore Johnny Karras was the game's "Merriwell in moleskins" for the Illini. The fleet-footed back carried 14 times for 48 yards via rushing, giving him 702 yards in that department for the season and a new Western Conference record.

Les Horvath of Ohio State set the old mark of 699 in 1944—and Karras has a game to go.

Karras also came up with the game's most spectacular play. It was a 95-yard kickoff return which moved the Ilini back out front 17-14 in the third session after the Bucks had grabbed a 14-10 edge with two fast touchdowns.

On his long jaunt, after taking a handoff from Dick Raklovits who tok the kick, Karras was hemmed in at least three times on the sidelines by Ohio tacklers. He shook them off, however, and was going away as he crossed the last stripe.

Behind 17-14 in the fourth period after Karras' mighty jaunt, the Bucks gambled on a fourth-down plunge for two yards in midfield. They made good on it with a smash at tackle by fullback Curly Morrison, and went on in for the winning touchdown—a 34-yard pass from Pandel Savic to halfback Ray Hamilton which caught the invaders flat-footed.

Kazmaier, Sella Passes Pace Tigers

By Jack Hand

Princeton, N. J., Nov. 12 (AP).—The Dick Kazmaier-to-George Sella aerial team boosted Princeton to a third straight Big Three title today with a 21-13 victory over Yale. Princeton barely survived a desperate second-half Eli passing attack.

Three-touchdown underdogs after a poor season, Yale played the favored Princetons' off their feet in the final quarter. But the pitching of Stu Tisdale and Levi Jackson couldn't quite make the grade.

Kazmaier-to-Sella passes accounted for two Princeton touchdowns and Fullback Jack Davison bulled across for the other in what was supposed to have been a lopsided contest.

There was nothing lopsided about the fierce second half, which ended with Fullback Jim Fuchs churning for yardage deep in Tiger territory on the 14.

Tisdale, who sneaked over from the 1 for the first Yale score in the second quarter, engineered the second score with a bull's-eye 9-yard pass to Jackson just before the end of the third quarter.

All through the closing minutes, with early darkness settling on the numbed 45,000 spectators at Palmer Stadium, Tisdale and Jackson were throwing at the embattled Princeton defense. Once they got to the 16 before alert Center Dave Hickok intercepted a pass by Jackson.

Although Princeton's surging ends, Jack McKenna and Cliff Kurrus, time and again smothered Tisdale for staggering losses, the Eli quarterback kept getting up to throw some more.

In all Tisdale completed 9 of 16 for 128 yards, most of them in the second half. Kazmaier hit his mark with 6 of 10 for 117 yards and two TD's.

It looked like a walkover in the early minutes as Princeton took the opening kickoff and marched 58 yards in 13 plays. The payoff was a Kazmaier-to-Sella toss from the 15 which Sella caught on the 10 and rambled over unmolested.

Frank Reichel, who booted all three placements, added a point that seemed all-important after Yale broke through for a touchdown at 1:41 of the second period. Jackson, the Blue's captain, churned up most of the yardage but Tisdale slipped over from the 1 on second try. Joe Palmer's placement was wide and Princeton held a slim 7-6 edge.

The Tigers slashed back, scoring on a Kazmaier to Ed Reed pass and a Davison smash from the 1.

Kazmaier went to the air at the start of the third quarter, connecting with John Emery for an 18-yard gainer, then passing to Sella for the tally.

Unable to make headway against the rugged Princeton line, Yale then went to the air with a vengeance. First it was John Robertson tossing and later Tisdale with Jackson his target. Jackson snagged touchdown pass in the end zone 13:31 of the third period.

Brown Beats Harvard in 28-14 Clash

Cambridge, Mass., Nov. 12 (AP).—Brown snapped its losing string against Harvard at seven games today, powering its way to a decisive 28-14 victory before 23,000. The Crimsons became the first seven-times loser in their football history dating from 1874.

The Bruins, who now have won six of their seven games, wasted little time as they took the opening kickoff and tallied on the third play from scrimmage, Joe Paterno plunging over from Harvard's 1.

Brown, which had not defeated Harvard since 1938, ended its "jinx" in decisive fashion, running up the highest Brown scoring total in the 48-game series begun in 1893.

Fullback George Paterno set up brother Joe's second tally by dashing 62 yards to Harvard's 20 as time ran out in the first session. Joe plunged over from the 4 on the third play of the second quarter.

A march, starting from Harvard's 47, gave Brown its third tally only three minutes after the fourth quarter started. The Bruins drove to the Crimson 8 and Roger Young tallied two plays later from the 2.

Brown's fourth touchdown, in the the final session, came on a 2-yard plunge by Arnie Green.

A sophomore passer, Cal Lowenstein got Harvard into scoring position late in the game as he ran for 15 yards to Brown's 42 and then contacted Henry on Brown's 25 with a 30-yard toss. Henry dashed across with only seconds remaining.

Iowa Mauled By Wisconsin

Madison, Wis., Nov. 12. (AP).—Those amazing Wisconsin Badgers knifed their way to a 28-point lead and then strangled a tremendous aerial counter-attack today to subdue Iowa, 35 to 13 and stay in the thick of the Big 10 title race.

The Badgers piled up touchdowns in all four quarters to the delight of 51,000 homecoming fans.

Iowa fired 41 passes in a desperate attempt to pull up even. But the Badgers' mighty line stiffened and finally snuffed out the threat. Quarterback Bob Petruska's nifty passing and the great running of Halfback Gwynn Christensen sparked the devastating Badger offensive but credit for the win really should go to the line which did a magnificent job.

It was Wisconsin's third league victory against a loss and a tie. Now, only Minnesota stands in the way of a possible slice of Big 10 honors and maybe even the Rose Bowl. For the hapless Hawkeyes, it was the second conference loss in five starts and the end of title hopes.

Temple Bows To Penn State

Philadelphia, Nov. 12 (AP).—Temple University put over a touchdown against Penn State for the first time in five years today but the Nittany Lions quadrupled that production for a 28-7 victory.

Penn State had a 21-0 bulge when Temple's Tom Skladany, second string fullback, went over from the 13-yard stripe in the third period.

The Owl touchdown, while elating the home folks in the crowd of 18,000, didn't shock the charges of Joe Bedenk as they rolled to their seventh straight win of the series and their fifth victory in eight games this season.

The game was marked by long marches for touchdowns but the most spectacular play was a second period Penn State pass. The aerial from Owen Dougherty to Bob Hicks covered 65 yards.

Boston College Topples Rams

Boston, Nov. 12 (AP).—The hard-hitting Boston College Eagles swept to three first-half touchdowns and then staved off a last period rush to outlast the Fordham Rams, 20 to 12, today before a chilled crowd of 15,798 at Braves Field.

Both teams had to take to the air, so fierce was the line play. B. C., thanks to the line smashing of Fullback Ed Petela, and the weaving dashes of Al Cannava was able to put on more of a rushing game.

Butch Songin, Eagle quarterback and the leading passer of the East, completed 8 of 18 passes, one of them for a touchdown to end Stan Goode. Petela ran 11 yards for another TD in the first quarter. The last B. C. score came in the second period, when Cannava scooted over from the 4-yard line, untouched after he took a pitchout from Songin.

Boston College scoring: Touchdowns—Goode, Petela, Cannava. Points after touchdowns—Petela (2).

Buffalo U. Wins, 39-7

Kingston, R. I., Nov. 12 (AP).—The University of Buffalo football forces handed the Rhode Island State Rams their eighth straight setback as they romped to a 39-7 victory. It marked the first time the Rams have failed to win at least one game since 1920.

POVICH—From Pg. 1-C

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Stadium was first scheduled, it was supposed to be ND's stiffest test. Before the teams took the field, the Irish were favored by 33 points, their highest margin of favoritism all season . . . the Philadelphia Eagles are acclaiming Pete Pihos as by far the finest end in pro football, and add, "the closest guy to him is Leon Hart of Notre Dame." . . . Bill Veeck will sell his stock in the Indians, "but only at the right price."

On the betting front: You can have the Redskins and 17 points against the Eagles, according to latest odds. The Giants are 6½-point favorites over Green Bay, the Rams 14 points over Pittsburgh; the Cardinals 13 points over the Bulldogs . . . in the All-America Conference, the Forty-Niners are 14-point favorites over L. A. Dons, Cleveland is 14½ points over Buffalo, and the N .Y. Yankees 14½ points over the Chicago Hornets . . . the newest report is that the ACC will accept a merger with the National Football League this winter, and that Ray Flaherty of the Hornets will move in as coach of the Redskins . . . who is being fooled when the announcers say a team is being penalized 15 yards for a "personal foul"? It used to be unnecessary roughness, which was a polite term for slugging, which is usually what took place . . . in the pro leagues, many a lineman increases his effectiveness at blocking by taping the cardboard top of a bandage box to his forearm and pulling his jersey sleeve over it. It's football's version of brass knuckles, and is always undetected . . . at Charlottesville, Va., some of the heretics among University of Virginia folks are proclaiming Fullback Johnny Papit as a better football player than Bill Dudley . . . Maryland and Boston U. signed only a one-year act for their game today, but both schools are now disposed to renew the relationship.

MARYLAND COACH JIM TATUM came up with a bit of psychological warfare aimed at arousing his athletes against Harry Agganis, the B. U. passing ace. In his written briefs to the Maryland squad earlier in the week, Tatum called attention to the fact that Agganis chooses to wear No. 33, and referred to him bitingly as "the self-appointed Sammy Baugh" . . . Maryland, which already boasts two football-playing sons of the Modzeleswki family of West Natrona, Pa.—205-pound Fullback Ed (Big Mo), and 230-pound Tackle Dick (Little Mo), is now casting covetous eyes at little brother Gene. He's only 5 years old, but weighs a whopping 85 pounds . . . Boston University paid the expenses of the Alligator Bowl officials to the game today, hopeful of making an impression . . . Joe Louis, in Boston on his exhibition tour, hasn't quite fought himself into shape for any comeback. He still weighs in at 225 pounds, 26 more than he weighed for his first Billy Conn bout . . . the two-platoon system has slowed up college football, with this year's game averaging 7 minutes longer than previous seasons. A survey of 171 games shows that the average elapsed time of each 60-minute contest is 2 hours, 26 minutes . . . B. U. Coach Buff Donelli telephoned Maryland Coach Tatum last night as a courtesy call. "I'd like to wish you good luck, Jim," laughed Donelli, "but let's not start that sort of stuff and say things we don't really mean" . . .

Nor'western Tops Colgate By 39 to 20

Evanston, Ill., Nov. 12 (U.P.).—Northwestern slithered to three first-period touchdowns on a wet field today and then went on for a 39-20 triumph over Colgate to break a three-game losing streak before 40,000 fans in Dyche Stadium.

The first Northwestern score came in the opening two minutes. Tom Worthington intercepted Kelley's first pass and returned 16 yards to Colgate 42. From there Burson hit Burt Keddie for 13 yards, then Halfback Dick Alban for 29 and the score.

Before the period ended Colgate's Jackson King punted and the ball was dead on the Colgate 28. It took three plays and Dick Alban went six for a score.

Another score came on line blasting by Art Murakowski for 18 yards and then three.

Staunton Fights To 13-13 Tie

Woodstock, Va., Nov. 12.—Staunton Military Academy tied Massanutten Military Academy, 13-13, here today. The game ended with the ball in Massanutten's hands on their opponents 11-yard line and third down.

pass, he took one for 25 yards and grabbed 64 yards in 11 tries from scrimmage.

Climax of 71-Yard March

Kivus' 33-yard run culminated a 71-yard advance in retaliation for Denver's first score.

It came about when a deflected pass by Johnny Parise landed in the arms of End Mike Peterson for a 20-yard gain to the Denver 39.

Then Soph Sam Etcheverry threw a long one that Tommy Hardiman slapped into the arms of Parise, who raced to the 5 before Lou Surman halted his advance after 56 yards.

Etcheverry sneaked over for the score. The Carlsbad, N. Mex., youngster, who went into the game the country's thirteenth leading passer, salvaged his statistical rating in the fading moments.

With plenty of time on each, he completed seven straight passes that covered 74 yards. His last was a 34-yard beauty to End Gordon Cooper just 55 seconds before the game ended.

It came after Georgetown penetrations to Denver's 18, 17 and 26. All had fizzled.

Completes Nine Passes

Etcheverry, thanks to his flashy finish, completed 9 of 12 passes to improve on his .500 average. Little Hal Pfiefer, twelfth leading rusher going into the game, suffered a recurrence of an ankle injury and had only 20 yards in six efforts.

Cooper, eighth leading pass receiver, had only three catches beside his scoring one.

Denver's line was no match for the burly Hoyas, who chewed 281 yards on the ground. In an experimental mood, Georgetown should have been cheered by the showing of Sophs Terry Murphy and Tony Lumino.

Mattingly did his throwing early, completing eight of 18 passes for 142 yards. After that, Coach Margarita was content to let the boy work on their rushing offense.

The 2000-mile journey here was the longest ever made by a Georgetown football squad. The fact that it was productive insures the Hoyas a winning season. It was their fifth win in eight starts.

There's a strong suspicion, though, that it will take a victory over GW in Griffith Stadium next Saturday to make the season really successful.

Tulane Rips Vanderbilt By 41 to 14

Nashville, Tenn., Nov. 12 (AP).—Sparked by Fullback Eddie Price, Tulane strengthened its claim to the Southeastern Conference title by beating Vanderbilt 41-14 in a bruising football battle today.

The game was marred by numerous personal fouls for slugging and almost ended in a free-for-all.

Vanderbilt played the last three quarters without the services of Lee Nalley, leading punt-returner in the Nation. He was banished from the game for slugging in the first quarter.

Tulane scored its first touchdown in the opening period when Bobby Jones plunged over from the three. Euel Davis kicked the first of five points after touchdown.

Vanderbilt tied it up when Nelson Burton raced over from the nine. A 56-yard pass from Jamie Wade to Bucky Curtis set up the score.

Tulane then started to roll. Price scored three touchdowns on runs of 15, 69 and 60 yards, the last on a pass from Bill Bonar.

Tennessee In 35-7 Romp

By Bill Anderson

Memphis, Tenn., Nov. 12 (AP).—Hank Lauricella, 19-year-old sophomore, passed for three touchdowns and set up a fourth today as Tennessee smothered Mississippi, 35-7, in soggy Crump Stadium.

Lauricella's touchdown passes were for 23, 43, and 32 yards. Two of them were caught by senior End Charles Cummins. The other, which Lauricella tossed with four Mississippi men hanging on his neck, fell into the arms of Wingback Bert Rechichar.

The workhorse of the Tennessee team, Lauricella completing eight for 173 yards.

Fullback John Dottley, Mississippi's dependable offensive star, lugged the slippery pigskin 31 times, gaining 138 yards and boosting season's total of yards gained to 1,091. He is the Southeastern Conference's best ground gainer.

Cornell Win Streak Ended

Clayton cut loose with a 20-yard pass to Rowe before feeding that winger a touchdown heave from the 2-yard line.

Apparently convinced that two points were much too thin a margin, Dartmouth ran and passed for a second touchdown midway through the third session. It also was made on a Clayton-Rowe aerial, from 5 yards out.

Johnny Chapman, the Indians' defensive left halfback, set the stage for that "clincher" by recovering Frank Miller's fumble on Dartmouth's 44.

Truman Watches Small Fry Again, Gets Rousing Cheer

By Jules Loh

It's no longer a novelty for President Truman to take his Saturday morning constitutional in the direction of the Ellipse to watch local small fry play football. He does it all the time.

It was something new yesterday, though, when the Chief Executive received a cheer from the Blessed Sacrament parochial school's cheering squad.

The President dropped around about 9:30 to watch Blessed Sacrament take the section 1 CYO crown by a 20-6 win over Our Lady of Lourdes.

When the girls recognized the President, their cheer sounded like this: "Yea Harry, yea Truman, yea yea Harry Truman!"

Mr. Truman turned, smiled and waved at them.

Then pretty little Suzie Kennedy, one of the cheerleaders, walked up to him just as boldly as you please and asked, "Mr. President, may I take your picture?"

"Sure," replied Mr. Truman. He put his hand in his coat pocket, leaned on his walking stick, smiled, and Suzie snapped her Brownie.

The President approached Frank Webb, one of the CYO directors, and told him he would rather watch these kids than professionals.

Mr. Truman added with a grin that he would certainly like to stay and see the rest of the games, but that he had to go to work.

Middies Put on Scoring Spree for 'Big Brass'

Eisenhower Watches Navy Rout Columbia

to give the Middies a 6-0 lead at 9:55 of the second period. It stayed there when Roger Drew who later booted four extra points for the naval service, rushed his effort and saw it slide off to the right.

Columbia, which hasn't tasted victory since it beat Harvard in September, came within three yards of tying the count just before intermission. With Leo van Bellingham rushing and Kermit Tracy, a real sharp-shooter, doing the pitching the Lions romped 64 yards before the threat was stopped.

On the end, as Tracy tried for the payoff toss from three yards out, it was Tackle Walt Gragg who saved the Tars. He tore in and flattened Tracy for a 7-yard loss.

Zastrow Starts Clicking

When Navy got around to taking out a little insurance midway of the third quarter it took three clever passes by Quarterback Bob Zastrow, two of them to Ron Andresen, to set up a score on the end of a 51-yard march. This time Hauff provided the big punch, a 4-yard slant off tackle, followed by Drew's first placement.

It was strictly a land attack which gave the Middies a 20-0 lead the next time they got the ball. Only six plays were consumed, the important one after a 46-yard advance being credited to Arnold, who broke through a pileup around left end and went over standing up after a 4-yard jaunt.

There the scoring stopped—until the last minute of the game. Five minutes of play remained when Zastrow turned the quarterbacking over to Mike Sorrentino, whose first attack was something less than devastating.

But Dave Jones pushed the Lions back to their own 15 by kicking out of bounds, and another reserve, Ned King, gave Navy possession on the Columbia 34, with a nice runback of Columbia's return punt.

Two Sorrentino passes, for 14 and 11 yards to Larry Treadwell, ate up most of the distance. From a single yard out Sorrentino sent King at the line, the Greenwich, Conn., lad barely getting over before being hurled back.

Only 50 seconds were left, but Navy's reserves were howling to show their talent—and did. A fumble by Columbia's Bob Wanselow helped, of course, but Bob McDonald was there to recover on the Lion 36. A play later the Middies had scored their fifth touchdown.

The only aerial score of the day involved Sorrentino and Frank Pucylowski, a third-classman from Stambaugh, Pa., Pucylowski ran the last 15 yards aand hurdled into the end zone on the combined 36-yard effort with a scant 20 seconds of play left.

2 Late Plays 'Killed' BU, Tatum Says

game happened after we kicked off to B. U. for the last time," said Tatum. "Roy Krouse rushed Agganis on a second-down pass and made him hurry a bad throw. And on third down Johnny Idzik nailed Whelan for a two-yard loss at right end, forcing 'em to punt on fourth down.

"Those were the two plays that killed B. U. They never got the ball again."

TATUM WAS UNASHAMED of the fact that Agganis completed nine of the thirteen passes he threw against Maryland.

"They didn't throw any for touchdowns," he pointed out. "we were willing to let him complete those throws to Sulima in the flat. We played Sulima loose all day, and he was never in position to take a scoring pass."

It was sub Quarterback Lavine who threw the biggest fright into Tatum after that young man engineered Maryland's 81-yard stampede to the winning touchdown in the final quarter.

"Lavine was wonderful on that drive, the way he mixed the plays up and kept B. U. off balance," said Tatum. "I wanted to rush out there and hug him for the smart job he was doing. And then after we scored, I felt like shooting Lavine in the final minutes.

"Boston crowded him in the last few minutes, and I wanted Lavine to eat the ball and take a loss. But after he was tackled he nervily lateraled to Modzelewski. Bib Ed had to make a shoe-string catch to get the ball that might have rolled free, and beat us. I thought Lavine was too brave right then."

BIG RAY KROUSE, Maryland's All-America tackle candidate, alienated no supporters with his tremendous performance against Boston U. today. As if testing Krouse, B. U. shot the first two plays of the game at him, and ended up with minus 2 yards.

But there were even more impressive performers in the Maryland line than Krouse today. One was Bob Ward, watchcharm guard, who was all over the field, harassing Agganis on his passes, and slowing Whelan's end runs. The other was Chester Gierula, Ward's running mate who all but earned a B. U. letter for his continued presence in the Boston backfield.

It was Gierula who perhaps averted defeat for Maryland late in the third quarter after B. U. Tackle Hal Knight recovered a fumble by Lavine on the Maryland 7-yard line. Boston pounded to within 1 foot of first down on the Maryland 4, when Gierula rose up in the Maryland line and slammed down Kent inches short of a first down, enabling the Terrapins to take over the ball.

Purdue Wallops Marquette, 41-7

Lafayette, Ind., Nov. 12 (AP).—Junior John Kerestes whipped through Marquette's staggering line for three touchdowns today in a 41-7 Purdue victory, its first at home this season.

The big fullback's performance softened 28,000 Purdue fans' misery over the last home-field appearances of Halfbacks Harry Szulborski and Norbert Adams. Their hard running also contributed to Marquette's bad afternoon.

Boston Beats Caps, 76-68, As Fists Fly

The Boston Celtics' first triumph in five National Basketball Association games this season came at the expense of the Caps last night, 76-68, before 3191 fans at Uline Arena.

Featuring the smooth-working combination of Brady Walker and George Kaftan, the Celtics gave the local court professionals their second defeat in six starts.

In the fourth period some real fist-swinging involved Dick Schulz and the Celts' Dermie O'Connell. An unidentified fan even got in a lick or two before both players were banished. Earlier the Caps' Chick Halbert had drawn a technical foul for angrily hurling the ball and the Celtics' Sonny Hertzberg, who played with Washington last year, had made threatening motions at Referee Phil Fox.

Walker and Kaftan accounted for 20 and 19 points, respectively, in a steady onslaught that had the weary Caps, playing their fourth game in five days, gasping by the middle of the second quarter. Both were outscored by Jack Nichols, burly Cap floorman, who totalled 21 points in a futile effort.

When he was needed most, as the Caps tried to dig out of an 18-point deficit in the final quarter, Freddy Scolari was in the dressing room with a damaged eye. He will be X-rayed today to determine the extent of injury caused by somebody's thumb.

Although the Caps dropped behind by six points in the first period, they ended it all even at 22-all. It was in the second stanza that Boston ran up the winning margin.

Kaftan and Walker did Cap hopes the most damage, but Hertzberg's uncanny long shooting also helped the Celtics. At intermission Boston led, 42-35, and by the time a five-minute scoring drought for obth teams set in midway of the third period the Celtics had a 56-40 advantage.

If the Caps' shooting had been slightly off to that point, it then became disastrous. Despite its poor luck, however, Washington closed to within seven points toward the end, a fact which bothered the coasting Celtics very little.

Duke Routs G. W., 35-0

Cox and Self Pace Wade's Eleven

Burak and Guard Dixie Howell, on the bench.

Andy Davis, G. W.'s passing ace, was held back except for spot plays, and Jack Tivnan, who sparkled in the Maryland game last week, was sadly off in his passing.

The defensive play of Duke Tackle Lou Allen and Guard Johnny Reese put a halt to G. W.'s attempt to move by land, and Lou Viau and George Skipworth each intercepted two of G. W.'s 29 passes.

The Blue Devils intercepted six altogether.

So feeble was G. W.'s offense that it didn't move into Duke territory under its own power until late in the third quarter.

After wasting a 42-yard march to G. W.'s 4 the first time they had the ball, the Blue Devils went all the way at the 12 minutes mark.

Fred Perkinson intercepted a wobbly Tivnan pass on the GW 35 to set that first touchdown drive in motion. Cox took over then, and flipped over Colonial Billy Shaw's head to Tom Hughes, who ran to the 5. Fred Schoonmaker whacked over center to the 1, and Jack Mountie pounded over.

Mike Souchak converted for the first of five times.

G. W. got a break early in the second quarter when Joe Kennelly intercepted a Cox pass on the Duke 20. On second down however, Davis failed to spot Al DuGoff in the left flat and passed over the middle where Skipworth intercepted.

and Souchak for 11. Stephanz bucked over right tackle from the 5.

On the last play of the first half, Cox faded to pass, couldn't spot a receiver, and decided to run. He shuffled to his right, jiggled his hips enough to fake Jerry Angel and Art Kojoyian out of position, reversed his field and sprinted

Cox went to work and paced the Devils on an 80-yard drive which resulted in the second touchdown midway in the second quarter. He hit Hughes for 15 yards, Ceep Youmans for 34, Paul Stephanz for 10 down the left sideline 43 yards for a touchdown.

Duke's margin was 21-0 at intermission. Cox saw action in the third period long enough to lead a 23-yard skip for another Duke touchdown. Viau set it up when a G. W. reverse play got fouled up, and he fell on the loose ball at the Colonial 23.

Youmans outfoxed Shaw to grab a Cox pass for 11 yards, and Stephanz further discombooberated Shaw by snaring a pass to the 7. Cox then fired to Tom Powers over the middle for the touchdown.

Viau got in G. W.'s hair again late in the quarter by intercepting a Davis lob on the G. W. 48. Self hit Powers with a shot to the 26, and then Self passed to Suchak, who bypassed Pete Cordelli for the score.

Clark, Phelps Co-Stars

Kentucky Trounces Florida, Parilli Pass Star, 35 to 0

Tampa, Fla., Nov. 12 (AP).—Kentucky showed everything expected of a Southeastern Conference champion tonight in whipping Florida 35-0.

Quarterback Babe Parilli engineered Kentucky's first three touchdown marches. The hard running of Emery Clark and Dopey Phelph ate up the ground.

Sophomore Cliff Lawson and Bobby Brooks streaked 64 and 69 yards for long range touchdowns. But it was strictly a team triumph and one for Coach Paul Bryant.

Jerry Claiborne, an end who played as safety man on defense, was a particular thorn in Florida's side. He intercepted or broke up what passes Angus Williams and Vic Vaccaro were able to get off before Kentucky's line broke in on them.

Parilli connected on six of eight passes for 89 yards. Then he sat out the whole second half as Don Fucci, Bob Bezuk and Paul Jones took turns running the team.

Kentucky's three first-half scoring marches went for 30, 38 and 54 yards. Phelps carried it over twice from the 2 and 11. Clark took the first one over on a 17-yard jaunt.

Citadel Edges V. M. I., 19-14; Delaware Drops W. - L., 13-7

Lexington, Va., Nov. 12 (AP).—Delaware awaited bowl bids tonight after polishing off Washington and Lee, 13-7, before 5000 here this afternoon.

The Blue Hens, with a record of seven wins and one loss, scored twice in the first 10 minutes today and then staved off all but one Washington and Lee scoring threat.

Delaware struck twice for 13 points at the start. The Blue Hens rolled 48 yards for a touchdown, Charley Smith finally passing to end Jimmy Thomas for the score. Earl Walters' placement was wide.

Minutes later Smith tossed a short pass to fullback Mariano Stalloni and the burly back romped 59 yards to score. Walters' kick was good.

Washington and Lee finally got across a touchdown in the fourth quarter.

Charleston, S. C., Nov. 11 (AP).—The Citadel fought from behind twice to topple favored Virginia Military Institute, 19-14, in a savage Southern Conference football battle today.

A Parent's Day crowd estimated at 8,000 saw The Citadel score the winning touchdown as the final period opened.

The Citadel scored late in the first period Shahid took a short pass from Jack Chandler and ran 70 yards to the V. M. I. nine. Three plays later Chandler pitched to Jack McConnel in the end zone.

V. M. I. drove 41 yards in the second period and Veltri sneaked over. Bill Graf kicked the point.

Near the end of the first half, The Citadel recovered a V. M. I. fumble on their own 44. Chandler heaved a long pass to Foxworth who took the ball on the five and cruised over. Matthews kicked the point.

Midway in the third period with Citadel in possession of the ball on its own 27, Chandler, back to pass, was tackled hard and lost the ball which rolled back to the three where V. M. I. recovered. Citadel was penalized to the yard and a half line.

Howard U. Scores, 38-7 For Fifth Of Season

By Stan Anderson

The Howard University Bisons gained their fifth victory of the season yesterday trouncing Delaware State College 38-7 before 4000 at Howard Stadium.

The Bisons' first touchdown came early in the second period after a sustained drive of 61 yards led by Slick Abrams and Roger Goodson. It ended with Hal Davidson tossing a 9-yard pass to Goodson in the end zone.

Before the half ended Howard tallied again when Harry Thompson blocked Obie Palmer's punt on the 18. Then Davidson flipped 18 yards to Hillary Thompson for the TD.

A fancy display of broken field running by Slick Abrams in the third period put the score at 20-0. Other Howard scores came on a 2-yard offtackle smash by Virgil Anderson, a 54-yard gallop by Abrams, and a 77-yard pass play form Ernie Davis to Bill Hall. Thompson added two conversions to the Bisons' scoring spree.

Delaware's only touchdown came in the fourth period. After Carver Leach, fumbled on the Hornets' 25, Bob Hutchins bulled over from 6 yards out. Reeves converted.

This was the Bisons final home game of the season and fourteen veteran players performed for the last time for their Alma Mater.

Eddie Arcaro Pulls a 'Merkle', Misjudges Finish Of Long Pimlico Cup Event by a Country Mile

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

PIMLICO, MD., Nov. 12.—Baseball's Fred Merkle, football's Roy Riegels and other sports figures who gained lasting fame through boners can move over and make room for a new champion—Jockey Eddie Arcaro.

Eddie Arcaro

Erring Eddie earned his negative rating with the worst miscue of many a turf season as Frank A. Bonsal's Pilaster, paying $6.20, galloped away with the $15,000 added Pimlico Cup Handicap before 16,000 here today.

Arcaro made only one mistake—he misjudged the finish by a country mile or a full swing of the track. Coming through the stretch with Brookmeade Stable's Blue Hills, Arcaro had a good lead. Inside the sixteenth pole he applied the whip—one of those victory taps—and then waved the stick in Blue Hills' eyes, the proper procedure for a top flight jockey reaching the finish line in a big race.

He loose-reined until in front of the clubhouse as Jimmy Lynch aboard Bayeux, and Logan Batcheller, on Stud Poker, shook off their amazement and drove past Arcaro and Blue Hills.

Arcaro awoke at the turn, sent Blue Hills into action again but the damage had been done. The game 3-year-old regained the lead but his zip was gone.

Pilaster, nursed along in last position in the field of four until after 2 miles, was placed to a drive by Jockey Carson Kirk. The 5-year-old disposed of the tiring Blue Hills apparently without effort and was coasting at the end.

Blue Hills floundered home eight lengths behind the winner and four lengths in advance of Bayeux, with Stud Poker trailing.

Despite his mistake, Arcaro was only lightly booed when he returned to unsaddle Blue Hills, the odds-on favorite. Kirk, with Pilaster, was cheered lustily, giving the impression that, while Blue Hills drew the big money, the majority of the customers were solid behind Pilaster, one of the most popular horses ever to race in Maryland.

Arcaro admitted he erred and said he was grateful to Jockey Jimmy Lynch, who yelled, "We've got to go around again, buddy" when he caught up with Blue Hills at the clubhouse turn.

Lynch said he was aware there was another mile to go as he moved along behind Arcaro. However, when Eddie pulled his whip Lynch said to himself, "Maybe Eddie is right." Jimmy commented: "I almost did the same thing."

Kirk, who rode Pilaster to a series of stake victories in Maryland last fall for the late Harry L. Straus, just smiled and chuckled something about "racing luck."

"Wouldn't have happened," said an old-timer discussing the boner, "if they had used the old half-mile track system of giving each jockey a mouthful of peas. Every time the rider passes the finish line he spits out a pea and when he hasn't any left he knows it's the last time around."

Many backers of Pilaster thought the gelding would have won regardless. However, the race looked like a cakewalk for Blue Hills until his attack of Arcaroitis.

Eddie sent the choice to the front directly after the break and had a good grip no him as he raced through the first mile head and head with StudPoker.Bayeux was third and Pilaster fourth after the first half mile.

The order was the same the next time the field entered the home lane. Then Arcaro put up his "finish" on Blue Hills and Bayeux charged past Stud Poker to be second as they came into the wire.

Batcheller, on Stud Poker, perhaps was first to sense the situation. He hustled his mount through on the inside and showed in front in the aforementioned gangup at the clubhouse turn.

In the meanwhile, it is doubtful if Kirk, trailing with Pilaster, knew anything of the drama being staged ahead. He simply sat tight on the ultimate winner.

At the far turn, Pilaster, now under urging, went to the other three. Kirk then let loose a couple of notches and Pilaster went into high gear and the race for all intents and purposes was history.

Pilaster was clocked in 4 minutes and 20 seconds for the gruelling distance, about average for the Pimlico Cup at this distance. Miss Grillo, in her victory last year, set a race and track record of 4:15 3/5.

The son of Pilate and Air Cooled earned $11,225 today to bring his 1949 total to $42,775, against $73,000 last year.

Favorites were booted around all afternoon, but the fans sent $1,118,268—best betting day of the fall season in this State—through the tote.

P. S.—Arcaro left on a vacation after the race and said he won't resume riding until California's Santa Anita opens.

Catholic U. Ties Favored Washington By 14 to 14

By West McLean
Post Reporter

Fourteen-point favored Washington College was forced to take to the air in a desperation fourth period drive to gain a 14-14 tie with Catholic University yesterday at Brookland Stadium.

It was the Cardinals' homecoming game and brought 2,000 people out to see Coach Jan Janowski's charges score twice in the third period to gain the tie.

Washington	STATISTICS	Catholic U.
14	First downs	15
133	Yards gained passing	81
104	Yards gained rushing	179
26	Passes attempted	14
12	Passes completed	5

43	Average yards per punt	33.5
30	Yards punts returned	40
3	Number of fumbles	2
1	Fumbles recovered	4
20	Penalties	45

Johnnie Wilson's passes sparked the fourth period rally which overcame a 14-7 Catholic lead. Wilson passed to Ken Howard for 33 yards and a first down on the Catholic 19. Another Wilson-to-Howard pass was good for four yards and then Wilson passed to Vince Magliochetti for a first down on the Cards' 4.

Pass Brings Tally

Magliochetti's jump pass to Lou Silverii was good for the touchdown. Wilson added the extra point to tie it up.

The first half was scoreless, with Catholic completely dominating the play but unable to score.

The Cardinals exploded in the second half, however, with Bucky Ennis taking the kickoff back 95 yards for a touchdown.

Ennis took Herb Eisenman's kick on his own 5 and sprinted straight up the middle of the field. He broke into the clear at the 50, cut to the sidelines and outraced the entire Washington team.

Holl rushed the extra point across.

The Shoremen came roaring back, with Howard taking Maiuri's kickoff on the 7 and returning it to the 36. The Wilson-to-Howard battery went into real action, then.

Howard lost 4 yards attempting to skirt the end. Wilson passed to Howard for 8. He missed on his next pass attempt and then went back into punt formation.

Here, he uncorked one to Howard again on the Cards' 43. Howard raced it down to the 11 for a first at that shot.

The Cards' line threw Vince Magliocetti for a two-yard loss but Wilson wasn't to be denied. He faded back and flipped one to Howard on the one and Howard stepped across for the score. Wilson added the first of his two extra points.

Catholic was determined to pull this one out, however, and Whitey Hubert took the left footed kick of Eisenman on his 20 and ran it back to the Cards' 32.

Holl Makes 5 Yards

Bill Holl smacked over guard for five yards and Bucky Ennis picked up a first down going seven yards off tackle. Ennis skirted his own left end for another five yards and Holl made it first and 10 on the Washington 45, plunging over the center of the line.

Ennis picked up a yard and Holl added another three before Yammi Yacobi flipped a pass to Ennis on the 27 and Bucky chalkwalked down the sideline to paydirt.

Maiuri converted to give Catholic a 14-7 lead which they held until midway in the fourth period. Catholic had the ball, first and 10 on Washington's 28 and were driving again when the game ended.

Silver Run Destroyed

3 Records Set but Tragedy Mars Middleburg Racing

By Harry De Mawby, Jr.

Middleburg, Va., Nov. 12 — Three track records, numerous spills and tragedy marked the thirteenth fall meeting of the Middleburg Hunt Race Association head today.

Happy Hill Farm's great chaser, Adaptable, upset the favored Larky Day and a strong field to win the featured Mary Mellon Steeplechase.

Adaptable, ridden by Pat Smithwick, was rated just off the pace and moved into the command at the last fence and held on to take first money in the 2½ mile test over brush. Adaptable's time of 4:26.1 established a record for the course.

Irl A. Daffin's Irish Monkey scored a record-breaking win in the Dresden, third race on the day's card, over a two mile brush course in the good time of 3:50.1.

Tragedy marked this race.

Mrs. John M. Sturgeon's Silver Run ripped his left foreleg on landing at the last fence and jockey Danny Marzani jumped clear of the aging gray gelding who was destroyed. Marzani, visibly aggrieved at the loss of his favorite mount, recovered to earn the place honors on Larky Day in the feature.

Mrs. L. E. Stoddard's Port Raider, ridden by H. Harris, accounted for the Gerald B. Webb, jr. Memorial, 2-mile hurdle handicap, in smart fashion after his strongest contender, Swiggle, was forced into the wing of the 2nd fence by the riderless Escarp, who had unseated his mount at the first jump.

Earl Phelps, former show ring rider, was aboard Mrs. Herbert A. May, jr.'s Smoky City to guide the Sid Watters trained horse to a track record and first honors in the Brookhill, only flat offering on the day's card.

AT PIMLICO

Dear Folks:

Might be a good idea for the stewards to ask Jockey L. Olah what happened to the filly Glorious Maxim in the three races under his charge. Those events were not run here, but the daughter of Maxim, after showing nothing, suddenly popped up with a front-running effort under Apprentice Nolan Griffith that was amazing. By the way, young Griffith is living up to the promises I made for him at Charles Town last spring. His agent is former Jockey Skeets Holland, who evidently has passed along plenty of saddle know-how to the kid. Apprentice Dick Lawless won 25 races at the Lincoln Downs meeting and will perform here Monday, finishing out the season at Bowie before going to Charles Town.

Turner's Lists 4 8-Rounders

The boxing business, which picked up locally last week with the sensational third match between Jimmy Cooper and Charlie Titone, offers a "Carnival of Headliners" at Turner's Arena tomorrow night.

Four eights are on the bill, with local and out-of-town boys in action.

One of the eights will find New York's Bobby Rosado, a former Puerto Rican lightweight champion, making his debut against Marshall Clayton, former all-Army titleholder, undefeated in his four local appearances. Another eight is one of those local "naturals" in which Holly Mims will seek revenge against Artie Bethea for an upset defeat Artie hung on him last month.

The third eight involves Garland Edwards, a local middleweight, fresh from a victory over Joey Green in Roanoke, Va., and Frank Lacey, rugged Baltimorean.

In the fourth eight, Little Dynamite (real name is Ezekiah Williams) will go against Irish Pat O'Leary of Chicago, a new face.

Titone, Bell Fight at Uline

Charlie Titone, Brooklyn featherweight, has been signed to box Bobby Bell, brother of former welterweight title contender Tommy Bell of Youngstown, O., in the scheduled 10-round main event of the Liberty Athletic Club's second indoor boxing show at Uline Arena Friday night.

Titone has scored a knockout and boxed a draw with Jimmy Cooper in recent outings here, and will encounter in Bell, a fast-improving youngster whose recent performances in New York stamp him as an outstanding prospect.

Bell has developed into a real box office attraction since last appearing locally, having been taught the bolo punching style of Beau Jack by his brother, Sid Bell, who trains popular Beau.

Friday's feature bout will be televised over the Gillette Cavalcade of Sports via the National Broadcasting Company at 10 p. m.

Johannesburg, South Africa, Nov. 12. (AP)—Vic Toweel of South Africa won the British and Empire bantamweight boxing championship tonight by outpointing Stan Rowan of Liverpool in 15 rounds.

Langdon, Eastern Play

Eastern division leading Langdon Lions will be depending on their 132-pound quarterback, Sonny Long, to strengthen their hold on the first-place spot today at 2 p. m. when they face Defending Champion Eastern A. C. in a crucial Metropolitan Amateur Football League game between two undefeated squads.

It was Long who engineered Langdon's fifth consecutive victory last weekend over Arrow Linen and he will have Kenny Davis and Sonny White in the backfield with him against the defending champions.

Eastern can bounce the Metro League newcomers out of the division lead with a win and take over the first place spot themselves. The Easterners have won four games while deadlocking one and reached top form last Sunday with a 12-7 trouncing of the Riverside Rollers.

Other Metro League games today at 2 p. m., pair off: Riverside vs. Wasco Bullets, Hearst Playground; Brookland-Woodbridge vs. Great Falls, Forestville, Md.; and Casbah Restaurant vs. Arrow Dinen, Magruder Field, Hyattsville. Southwest Merchants will be idle with a bye.

Three Davidson Fumbles Win For Furman, 21-6

Greenville, S. C., Nov. 12. (AP).—Furman University fashioned three Davidson College fumbles into a convincing 21-6 Southern Conference victory here today.

Furman never was able to sustain a goalward march, but racked up its three touchdowns before Davidson could send Fullback Charles Runyan over from the 10 on one of two 76-yard drives.

Gallaudet's Homecoming Spoiled by Shepherd, 59 to 6

By Howard Flieger, Jr.

Nine touchdowns by Shepherd College ruined Homecoming Day for Gallaudet as it went down to a 59-6 defeat yesterday at the Hotchkiss field.

Homer Henderson started the Shepherd scoring in the first quarter when he returned a punt by Dick Amundsen for 70 yards. Barney Tucker scored in the second quarter on a 5-yard line plunge.

Gallaudet tallied its lone touchdown a few plays later, when its passing attack clicked for 69 yards to the Shepherd 1-yard stripe. Don Nuernberger then drove over center for the score, making the halftime score 14-6.

Shepherd turned on the heat in the second half. It scored a touchdown by John Bounatsas, who intercepted a pass by Gallaudet's Marvin Tuttle on the Gallaudet 38 and raced over. Emery Hamilton added another touchdown from the Bisons' 7.

Shepherd added 32 points in the final period as Pete Vance and Gerald Dorsey cracked over from the 5 and 1-yard lines, respectively.

Fred Tweedlie blocked a punt by Gallaudet's Dean Swaim and Nick Cascio recovered the ball in the Gallaudet end zone for the score.

Howard Abell broke loose for a 65-yard sprint and the seventh Shepherd touchdown. The only Shepherd touchdown by passing came when Dorsey passed 16 yards to Joe Higham in the end zone.

Army tried only three passes, Galiffa throwing all of them, but only one was completed. It was good for 22 yards. Twice Galiffa was dumped for 10-yard losses, and in all he lost 28 yards trying to pass. By contrast Bagnell hit his receivers on 15 out of 20 attempts for a total of 186 yards.

The melee that ended the game started when an Army line backer tangled with Penn's center, Charley Hassler, as Penn tried to start a play with three seconds to go and the ball on Penn's 43. Police, spectators, substitutes and coaches all dashed onto the filed and the referee announced that time had run out.

N. Carolina Misses Big Chance

Trailing by 6-0, Notre Dame Stops Tar Heel Thrust

By Red Smith
Copyright, 1949, N. Y. Herald Tribune

New York, Nov. 12.—The most widely advertised rabbit hunt of the shooting season turned out to be a full-blown civil war, with a rebel band from the hominy fields of Pennsylvania and New Jersey and Ohio slavering for the blood of Damyankees from New Orleans and Mississippi.

Smith

If the tremendous battle between Notre Dame and North Carolina proved anything to 67,000 subway students in Yankee Stadium, these were the lessons it taught:

That (a) the foot still has some place in football and (b) no matter how great the reputation of a college team may grow, no matter how well the scholars may be taught, 11 resolute guys who are not afraid can expose the records as a fraud and a mockery.

Two blocked kicks, plus the intractable determination of Carolina's cornpone set, made a noteworthy spectacle of Notre Dame's first New York visit in three years. It was, in fact, far and away the most stirring struggle seen through these bifocals this season.

The final score of 42 to 6 bore no recognizable resemblance to the quality of the encounter. It was easily the fiercest contest Notre Dame has had, and it saw Frank Leahy's agents trailing on the scoreboard for the first time since the early minutes of the season's opener with Washington.

One blocked kick—the first punt of Notre Dame's quarterback, Bob Williams, that has been slapped down this year—enabled North Carolina to score a touchdown and get off in front. Another blocked kick, which Steve Oracko was trying from placement after Notre Dame got a touchdown, held the score to a tie through the first half.

The Tar Heels made it a ball game for 38 minutes and 10 seconds, at which point Notre Dame moved into the lead and began to pull away.

When the charts of the game are studied and the movies scrutinized, it will show that the contest was won and lost in the first few seconds of the second quarter. On the last play of the first period, a pass by Williams and skimmed off the paws of big Leon Hart, the Notre Dame end, into the clutch of Carolina's able back, Dick Bunting. The Tar Heels, leading by 6 to 0 at the time, now set out to rack up a second touchdown.

North Carolina was afire. Its powerful single-wing attack, soundly conceived and beautifully guided, swept down field with a barreling rush, aided only by a curious rule infraction by the defense.

On one play there was a fumble which the Notre Dame bench thought the Irish had recovered, so Notre Dame's offensive specialists were hustled in to replace the defenders. It turned out that North Carolina had recovered a fumble, so Notre Dame suffered a five-yard penalty under the dizzy rule that permits substitutions only when the ball changes possession.

Now it was first down a foot from the goal line. On the first play everybody, including the officials, saw North Carolina linemen charge too soon. Carolina was penalized for being offside. It was first down, a bit more than five yards to go.

Billy Hayes tried to pass but Jim Martin and Bob Toneff were in on him, slapping the ball askew as it left his hand. Hayes ran the ball and was stopped in his tracks. On third down, Hart boomed into the Carolina backfield and flattened Bunting before he could move.

So the series which had begun with first down and a foot to go reached fourth down on the nine-yard line. It ended with another incomplete pass, and Notre Dame took over.

That was, to all practical effect, the end of Carolina's offensive gestures. From that point on, Tar Heel runners lost approximately as much ground as they gained. Their one shining chance to hang a two-touchdown deficit on the favorites was gone, and the favorites went on to win as the odds said they must.

Final Score Fails To Reflect Fierce Play of Contest

Irish Trounce Tar Heels, 42 to 6

Carolina Scores First, Holds 6-6 Tie at Halftime

single break today. Every stroke of fortune went the way of the Irish, who needed it least of all. But, as they say in North Carolina, "them that has gits."

Spectators were still filing into the stadium that Ruth built when Carolina came through with what will be remembered as Homeric as anything the Bambino did.

Fullback Dick Weiss kicked off to Spaniel on the Irish goal line and raced down field to nail the fleet-footed Rambler back on the 10-yard line. Four plays later, it happened.

With Williams back to punt, the 210-pound sophomore Tackle Wiley crashed through and blocked it. Tackle Bill Kuhn chased the zig-zagging ball for 2 seconds and then pounced on it for a Carolina recovery on the Irish 9-yard line.

Here was pandemonium indeed. The Tar Heel celebrants, waving their Confederate flags, practically went amok with excitement and jubilation. The Irish constituents were stunned and awe-stricken, refusing to believe what their very eyes were showing them.

Bunting slammed through tackle and got 4 yards on the first lick. Then, on the same play and through the same avenue, through Notre Dame's left tackle, the 163-pound understudy for Justice ripped through for a touchdown and there was hell to pay in the stands, the Carolina section, that is.

In came Justice, limping as he jogged in, to hold the ball for Williams. The kick was misdirected, wobbly and low. But it didn't matter to the Tar Heel rooters because the scoreboard showed North Carolina 6, Notre Dame 0.

Early in the second quarter, the Tar Heels almost struck again. Bunting intercepted a Williams pass on the Irish 43 and he and Hayes passed and ran the Heels to the Irish 1-yard line where it was first down. But the wild Irish rose at that point, pushing the Carolinians back 8 yards in four assaults against their line. A 5-yard backfield in motion penalty aided them no little.

Starting from their own 8, the Irish went 92 yards on three plays to tie it. Coutre and Sitko achieved a first down on the 22 and then Spaniel took over.

Finding a gaping hole at guard, the eely Spaniel slipped through and quick as a flash he was gone, 77 yards through the whole N. C. team for a touchdown.

Steve Oracko came in to kick the extra point, but Carolina's Ken Powell blocked it and the score remained 6-6 as the teams returned to the dressing rooms at half time.

Midway in the third quarter, with the Tar Heels still hanging on, the Irish got another break. Williams, standing on his own 15 yard line to punt, kicked weakly, but Powell was detected roughing him and the Irish were given the ball on the Notre Dame 30.

Instead of Carolina having the ball on its 45, the Irish had it and a first down to boot. Barrett, Spaniel and Sitko ran the Ramblers to the Carolina 43. At that stage, Williams passed 23 yards to the mastadonic Hart, who, when surrounded by Tar Heels, deftly lateraled to Barrett who raced 20 yards to break the tie.

This time Oracko kicked the point, sending Notre Dame ahead—and ahead to stay.

There were 22 minutes left to play and the Tarheels were simply tuckered out. They fumbled three times and the Irish recovered all three, converting one into a safety just as the third quarter opened.

Darkened Yankee Stadium was lighted up as play opened in the fourth quarter and the Irish, who were making their first appearance under lights, went to town, scoring 27 points.

Williams made it 22-6 by pitching an 1-yard strike to Spaniel in the end zone. Two minutes later, it was 28-6 as Swistowicz hauled in a Hayes' pass on the Notre Dame 15 and swept down the sidelines behind a mass of blockers for 84 yards and a touchdown.

Paced by Williams' pitching, the Ramblers moved 48 yards on two plays—both of them passes—to make it 35-6. He connected with Barrett first for 15 yards and then hit him in the end zone with a 33-yarder to wind up that excursion.

Barrett chalked up his third touchdown and the last of the game with a 15-yard pass from Johnny Mazur, second string Irish quarterback, in the last two minutes of the clash.

Shortly before, Carolina's Powell and Guard Paul Burns, of the Irish, traded punches at midfield. Players from both squads rushed on the field, but cool-headed officials quickly separated the battlers and permitted the rout to continue.

Officials Called 3 Bad Ones On Tar Heels, Says Snavely

New York, Nov. 12 (U.P.).—North Carolina coach Carl Snavely said tonight he thought there were three "poor official's decisions" in the 42-6 loss to Notre Dame today.

"But I do not think we could have won in any event," he added.

Snavely said once he thought Carolina back Dick Bunting scored a touchdown in the second period, but the referee ruled him stopped on the one and the Tar Heels subsequently lost the ball on downs. Snavely said Notre Dame's 43-yard third touchdown period pass play was illegal because Irish end Leon Hart made a forward handoff to Bill Barrett and he said the the North Carolina safety should have been a touchback because Dame knocked the ball into the end zone.

Frank Leahy, Notre Dame coach, said, "Coach Snavely may be right on the handoff. I didn't see it, but it could have been forward—and illegal."

Wolverines Overcome Indiana, 20-7

Ann Arbor, Mich., Nov. 12 (U.P.).—Michigan's shock troops wore down fighting but outmanned Indiana today and then rolled easily to a 20-to-7 victory which put the Wolverines within a single game of their third straight Big Ten title.

The Hoosiers, four-touchdown underdogs and rated only a tune-up for Michigan before its important game with Ohio State next week, matched the Wolverines almost yard for yard in the first half.

Hoosier End Cliff Anderson, a constant threat to Michigan, broke the 4-year-old Big Ten pass-catching record by boosting his season's total to 19 with five sensational catches.

The weariness of the lighter Indiana team was evident late in the third period. With Ortmann scoring several direct pass hits, the Wolverines moved down the field. Ortmann heaved to Don Peterson from the Indiana 12 and Peterson dragged three Indiana tacklers across with him to sew up the roughly-played game.

Midway in the third period, the Wolverines thundered from their own 47 with Fullback Don Dufek leading the way on a series of through-the-middle smashes. Halfback Bon Van Summern planted the lid on Indiana's hopes for upsetting Michigan by plunging over from the 6.

Md. Park Beats Out Greenbelt

Two sustained drives provided the scoring as Maryland Park High beat out Greenbelt, 7-6, last night in a Prince Georges County League game at Byrd Stadium.

Bob Thompson's conversion after a Maryland Park last-period touchdown was the margin that moved the Parkers into a first-place tie in the league with Bladensburg High.

An 82-yard march, climaxed by back Joe Suit's 7-yard plunge off tackle, had tied the game 6-6.

Greenbelt scored previously after a 76-yard drive when Jim Teel took a lateral from Ron Craig for a 14-yard scoring play.

Syracuse Wins, 47-13

Syracuse, Nov. 12 (AP).—Syracuse soundly trounced Holy Cross, 47-13, here this afternoon before a crowd of 15,000 which watched the Orange surprise the slightly favored Crusaders.

Coach Floyd Schwartz Walder's charges displayed a seven-touchdown scoring punch after the boys from Worcester, Mass., opened the point production. Bernie Custis passed for three touchdowns and ran for another to lead the Syracuse attack. Gordon Hensley caught two Custis passes for touchdowns, Bob Young started another, George Davis raced for one touchdown, as did Ed Faillace, and Jim Shreve intercepted a pass for still another. Harry Nussbaum converted five extra points. Bill Stetter and Paul Gallo tallied touchdowns for the seven-times beaten Crusaders.

Buss' Butt Beats Maryland, 3-2

Clarence Buss butted the ball through the goal in the second overtime period to give Penn State a 3-2 victory over Maryland in soccer yesterday at College Park.

The score was 2-2 at the end of the regulation game and the two teams agreed to play two 5-minute overtime periods. The first went scoreless. About a minute before the end of the second overtime period, Maryland's goalie Eric Baer was pulled out of position by a high bounding ball and Buss propelled it through the goal with a neat head shot.

'Women as Diplomats Are Here to Stay'

MME. VIJAYA LAKSHMI PANDIT, Ambassador of India (right), and her sister, Mrs. Krishna Hutheesing, have a few hours together at the embassy before one flies north and the other flies west. Mrs. Hutheesing is now on a lecture tour of the Middle West and Mme. Pandit has returned from New York, where she went to say farewell to her brother, Prime Minister Nehru of India. Fiery temperaments and forgiving hearts are said to be family traits, and they all have a charm beyond description

Harris & Ewing

WITH her daughter, Miss Rita Pandit, sitting beside her, the Ambassador of India, Mme. Pandit, waves from her car on the day of her arrival last spring at National Airport. Rita Pandit is now attending school in Switzerland specializing in languages. Mme. Pandit's elder two daughters are married and live in India. Both are graduates of Wellesley College. Mme. Pandit has served as a U. N. delegate and Ambassador to Moscow

Eloquent Mme. Pandit Proves the Proposition

This is the second in a series of articles on Embassy homes and hostesses

By Elizabeth Maguire

MADAME PANDIT, Ambassador of India, is proof positive that women as diplomats are here to stay. Her silvery hair and saris and her eloquent speeches are internationally admired. Sending her as ambassador to any country is top propaganda, scattering rose petals of good will.

Mme. Vijaya Lakshmi Pandit is a sister of Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru of India and of beautiful Mrs. Krishna Hutheesing, lecturer and author. Fiery temperament and forgiving hearts are said to be family traits. A strict reprimand from Ambassador Pandit is likely to be followed by an invitation to dinner or a promotion. And a good "dressing down" is spiced with enough humor and charm to remove everything but interest.

To appreciate fully the Indian Ambassador, one must hear her deliver an address. She is a minute woman, just 5 feet tall, but somehow she gives an imposing impression. She likes to wear gray or bluish lavender and she wears little or no jewelry. All that is pleasing, but when she rises to address an audience, what you hear sounds like poetry.

Has Distinguished Forebears

GHANDI knew the Nehrus well and placed great faith in the present Prime Minister. Pandit Motilal Nehru, father of Ambassador Pandit, was a learned lawyer, one of India's greatest. "No case could stand before Motilal," his friends say. Motilal's father—Madame Pandit's grandfather—was Chief of Police in Delhi, a position similar to Attorney General of this country.

This winter Madame Pandit will have with her at the embassy her two nephews, Harsha, 14, and Ajit, 13, whose names translated into English would be Joy and Unconquerable. Both have started classes at Friends School, where they will remain until early spring when their mother, Mrs. Hutheesing, returns from a lecture tour of the Middle West. Their father, meanwhile, is in India hard at work as editor of the Bombay Evening Star.

Harsha is an encyclopedia on horses. He is crazy about them and he can give the life history of each and every well known horse. Ajit, on the other hand, is interested in photography and shows promise of being a good reporter, because he bombards people with questions.

One Daughter at School

MISS RITA PANDIT, youngest of Madame Pandit's daughters, is in school this winter in Geneva, Switzerland. The other two daughters are married and live in India.

Few changes have been made at the embassy since Madame Pandit's arrival last spring, but she plans to redecorate completely. The embassy is a Georgian house of sizable proportions, situated high on a hill overlooking Rock Creek Park. It is the former residence of Walter Schoellkopf, retired American diplomat, and it was purchased by the Indian Government in 1945.

It is like entering fairyland to walk into the large drawing room with its mirrors and crystal chandeliers. Long French windows overlook a woodland of holly and oak, now shading into sombre tones of red and brown, and the flagstone terrace in front is lined with yellow chrysanthemums.

Rare Treasures Used

THE BRACKETS on the walls of the drawing room are hand wrought. The parquet floors were sent over from a French chateau and the delicately carved marble fireplace once belonged to Madame de Sevigne. In the dining room the pine paneling is set off by crimson satin draperies, and turbaned servants serve dinner uniformed in white.

Outside, the Indian flag flies, a beautiful standard with three stripes, orange, white and green. It was on Independence Day, August 15, 1947, that the Wheel of Victory was added to the center stripe.

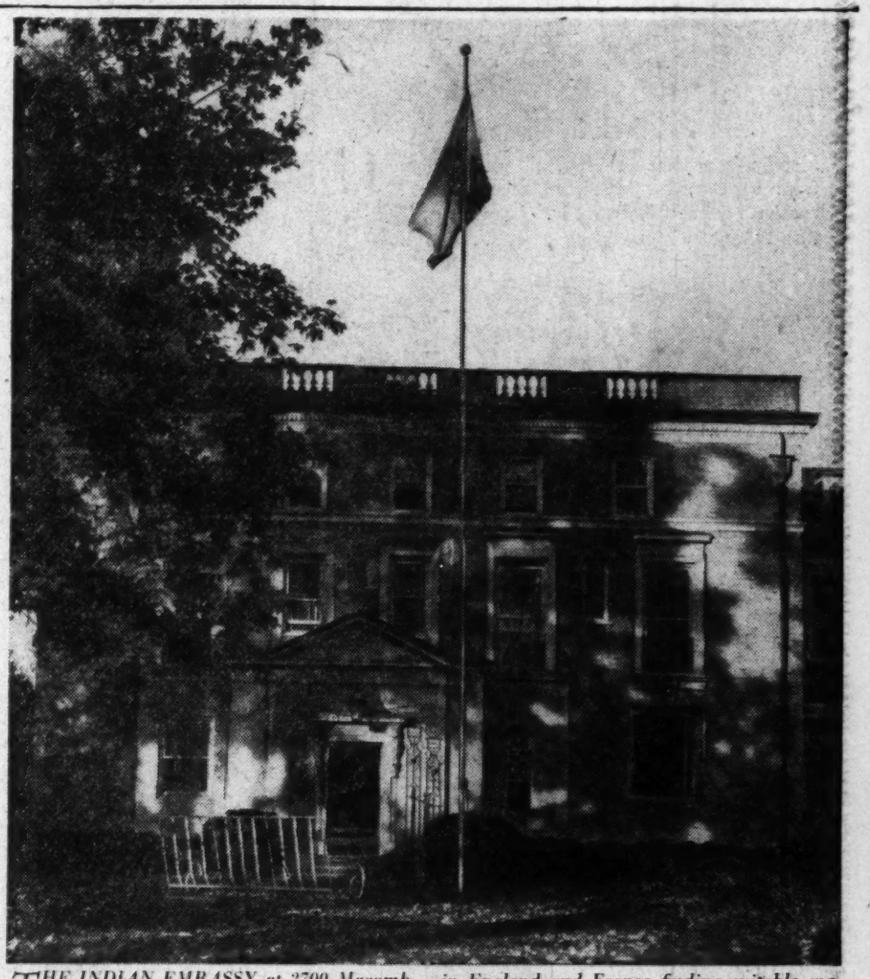
Washington is crowded with as much distinction as any world capital should be, but the Indian Embassy seems to have cornered more than its share of beauty. Besides Madame Pandit, there is Mrs. Sen, wife of the Minister, and Mrs. Chaudhuri, wife of the Military Attache, and there have been countless others in the past several years, dark-eyed, dark-haired dazzlers in saris of flame and gold, sapphire blue and silver, strawberry pink, violet, gray, and deepest red.

Mum on Moscow

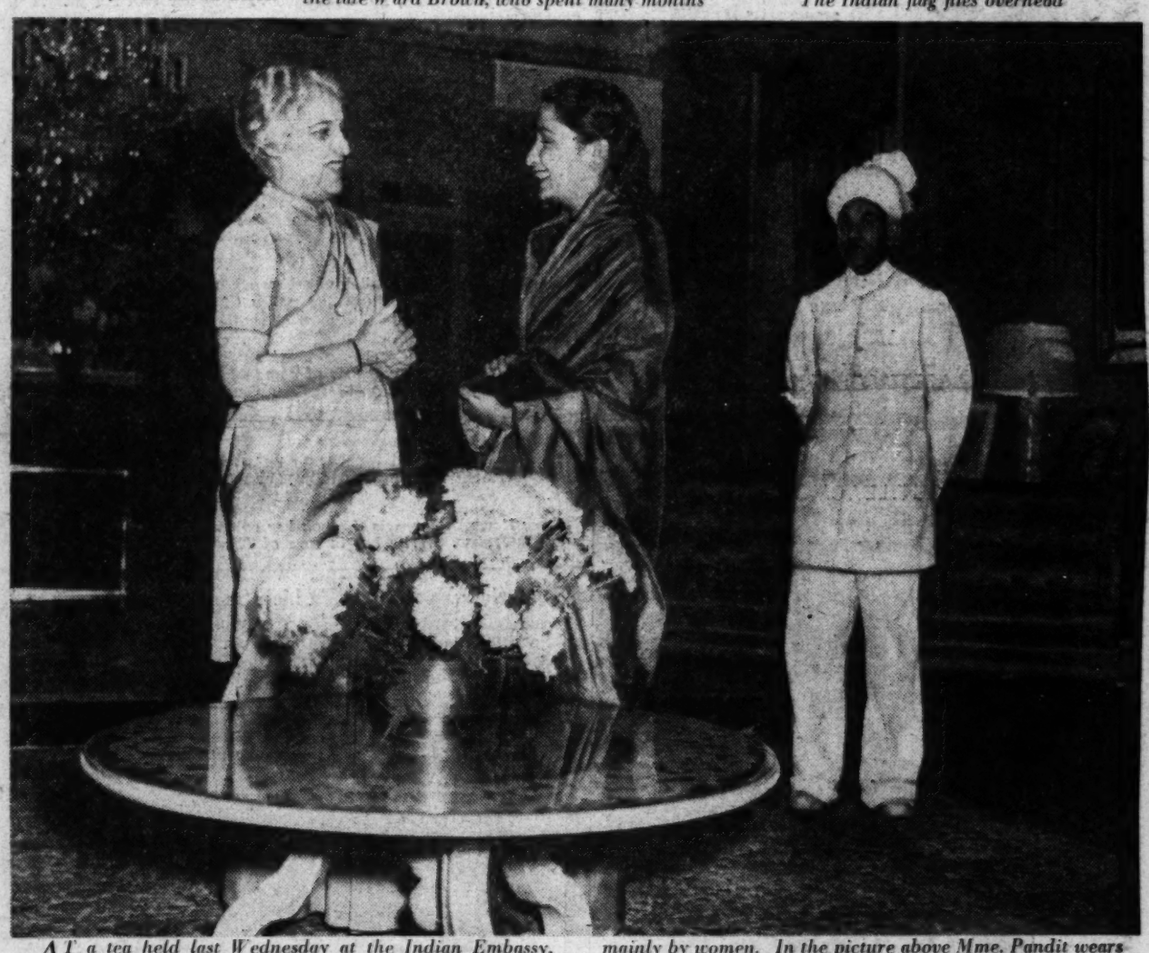
LIKE OTHER members of her family, Madame Pandit has spent several terms as a political prisoner, and she has given generously of her time and thinking to her country. The Nehru family home in Allahabad has been given over to the government for a hospital, and now the Prime Minister and his sister have only official residences to claim as homes.

During her glorious career Madame Pandit has served as Minister of Public Health, and Local Self Government; she was India's first ambassador to the Soviet Union; and she is the first woman ever to be appointed an ambassador to Washington.

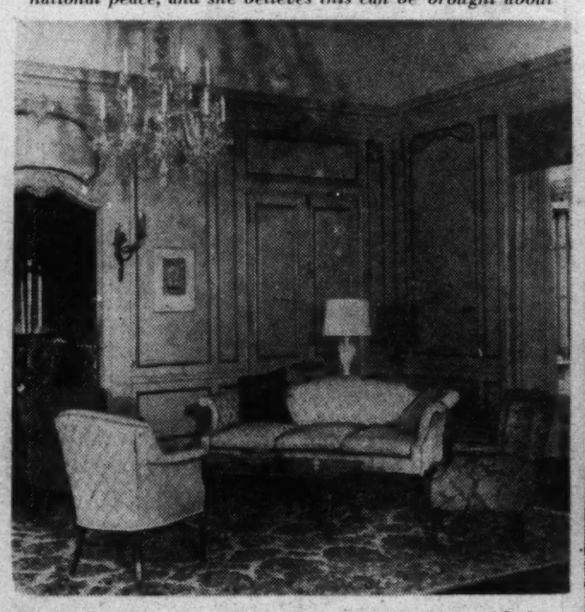
She has little to say about her stay in Moscow. All that, she says, is in her autobiography which is almost completed. She does admit, however, that Moscow is an interesting assignment for any diplomat at the present moment, as it presents a problem, which is a challenge and therefore interesting and stimulating.



THE INDIAN EMBASSY at 2700 Macomb st. is a Georgian house, situated high on a hill overlooking Rock Creek Park. Walter Schoellkopf, retired American diplomat, sold the residence to the Indian government in 1945. It was built in 1930-1932 by the late Ward Brown, who spent many months in England and France finding suitable material to put into the house. Wall brackets and door handles are hand wrought, the parquet floors are from a French chateau, and the mantel in the drawing room came from the house of Madame de Sevigne in Paris. The Indian flag flies overhead



AT a tea held last Wednesday at the Indian Embassy, Mme. Pandit (left) and Mrs. Sen, wife of the Minister, received members of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom. The Ambassador's chief aim is international peace, and she believes this can be brought about mainly by women. In the picture above Mme. Pandit wears a violet sari, and Mrs. Sen is in blue-green. The picture was taken in the embassy drawing room which looks out on a woodland of holly and oak. Turbaned servants uniformed in white is a new note added by Mme. Pandit.



A CORNER of the drawing room at the Embassy of India. Parquet floors are covered with priceless Persian rugs, and three walls of the room are lined with mirrors and French windows. The crystal chandeliers are antiques brought over from Paris, and on the wall hang Persian prints of Mogul princes. Mme. Pandit has changed the decor from rose to blue and she plans to redecorate completely in the near future. The doors open to a pine-paneled dining room set off by crimson satin draperies.

AJIT (left) and Harsha (right), nephews of Ambassador Pandit, are students at Friends School this winter, and are living at the embassy. Harsha is crazy about horses—can give the complete life history of any well-known horse—and Ajit's great interest is photography. Their father, Raja Hutheesing, edits a newspaper, the Bombay Evening Star

Woman Asks If Daughter, 25, Is Selfish in Failing to Contribute to Household Upkeep; Dad Is Hard Pressed and She Has Good Income

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Would you be able to help me with this problem through your column? Do you think that a daughter, 25 years old, making a five-figure salary, should contribute to the upkeep of the household?

My daughter, Sophie, isn't married and she wants to put her money away, so as to have a nest egg when she marries. I can see her point, but why milk her father dry in the process? He isn't getting any younger and he finds the monthly bills harder to meet.

I keep a maid, as I am unable to keep up the house without help; and naturally Sophie gets one-third use of the maid, the house, the food and all the drugs and other things she couldn't possibly do without—but for which she contributes nothing.

Sophie knows her father is finding it difficult these days to meet his home and office expenses, yet she never offers to pay her share. I think her attitude in this is very selfish, but I want to know what you think before I make an issue of it. T. S.

Define the Term, Five-Figure Income

DEAR T. S.: You say your daughter makes a "five-figure salary," and I wonder if your version of that term is the same as the generally accepted vernacular meaning.

In popular language, a five-figure income signifies personal revenue of not less than ten thousand dollars per annum, and it may be much more, anything just under a ceiling of one hundred thousand. The term "five figures" refers to the digits—as for instance 10,000, or 35,000 or 99,000. See?

Now if Sophie's earnings were in that bracket, it seems most improbable that she would be leeching on her aging father's overtaxed means to the full extent described, simply to scratch together a nest egg. Surely she can't be as callous, penurious and greedy as that, so I think you must mean that she is drawing a salary of fifty dollars or more a week.

However, the size of her income isn't the crux of the matter. Whether she makes much or little, the fact that she is adult age, single, ablebodied and on regular salary automatically means in our society that she owes somebody fair recompense for her board and keep. And since Sophie is living with her parents, as it happens, and her father is hard-pressed to meet basic expenses at home and in business, her obligation to "pay her own freight" is doubly underscored.

Is it Case of Chip Off the Old Block?

OF COURSE it may be that Sophie uses her salary, aside from savings, to clothe herself, pay for recreation, transportation, gifts, medical and dental care, etc., and therefore figures she gives the family a fair break financially, in sparing her father the special expenses of maintaining a spinster daughter indefinitely.

Nowadays that kind of accounting is generally accepted as cricket for girls in middle-class homes where living is geared to comfortable standards and some claim to social position. And perhaps Sophie is going on that theory, if you've been putting up that type of front.

Finally, the emotional pitch of self-concern evident in your letter suggests that Sophie's tightfisted policy (if such it is) of looking out for herself, in flinty disregard of sentiment or ethics, may be a case of "chip off the old block,"—i. e., a case of the daughter's absorbing the mother's characteristic anxious striving for dollar-security. Thus an ugly spirit of compulsive struggle and rivalry may exist, where devoted cooperation should prevail.

For advice, if your husband shares your notion that Sophie ought to pay board, etc., then deliberate with him to fix a sum that suits the circumstances, and ask her to pay it hereinafter. But if he disapproves the idea, better study your motives and drop the subject. M. H.

Mary Haworth counsels through her column, not by mail or personal interview. Write her in care of The Washington Post.

Graduate Nurses Hear Miss Hilbert

The basic "structure study" made by a national committee representing various nursing organizations and nonnurses interested in nursing education was explained Thursday evening to members of the D. C. Graduate Nurses' Association and the League of Nursing Education, meeting jointly in the auditorium of the Gas Light Company.

The speaker, Miss Hortense Hilbert, chairman of the national committee, outlined two plans currently under consideration for reorganizing the six national groups into one or two groups.

Under one plan, an organization called the American Nursing Association would be open to all persons connected with schools or agencies of nursing as well as to nurses. The other plan would have one organization for nurses, the American Nurses' Association, and another one for nonnurses.

Oscar Chapman's Hobby? Making Brunswick Stew

By Mary Van Rensselaer Thayer

NEITHER NATURE, art nor feminine pulchritude sends Interior's new Secretary-designate, Oscar Chapman, into ecstasies; but open an icebox door and he'll stand transfixed in mute admiration.

Mr. Chapman's hobby, when he finds leisure to indulge it, is cooking, and though the Secretary can turn out hoe and ash cakes that are "sump'in'" his specialty is Brunswick Stew. No matter how high office work piles, at least once a summer when butter beans and fresh corn are in season, Mr. Chapman rolls up his sleeves and stews away.

The Secretary-designate learned cookery in his native Virginia from a mother who had the faculty of making the minutiae of everyday small town living seem glamorous. The Secretary's father died when he was 6, the older children went away to school and he remained at home with his mother.

Oscar Chapman went to Colorado to recover from tuberculosis contracted during the First World War. He became an assistant to the famous Judge Ben B. Lindsey and, in his adopted State, set the pattern for his life's main interests—welfare and conservation.

Rallied Young Democrats

OUT IN COLORADO, he ventured into the political scene by organizing the young Democrats. In 1930 he managed successfully the campaign of Senator Costigan, a tariff expert, originally a Republican, but elected on a Democratic ticket. He also managed Senator Alvah B. Adams' campaign and in 1932 came to Washington, primarily for a rest and, on the side, to help Senator Costigan and assist Senator Adams with patronage problems. Soon Mr. Chapman was offered the job of Assistant Secretary of the Interior and it so completely satisfied his most passionate interests that he has stayed there ever since.

He's worked so hard that he hasn't had a vacation for years—and last summer the only time he took off was a single weekend at the beach. He has no opportunity for reading anything but current events happenings and his only real exercise is with the Chapmans' 5-year-old son, Jimmy.

Jimmy and his Pa go through a daily acrobatic routine, spar with terrible intensity and play at being cowboys. Even after the toughest day, Jimmy's plea "Couldn't we wrassle a bit?" gets the Secretary squirming on the floor in no time flat.

Thursday, maid's night out, no matter how hard Mrs. Chapman tries to shoo him away, the Secretary always insists on helping with the dishes. "Either I work here or else I start my sleeping" he threatens.

During 16 years in the Department of the Interior Oscar Chapman has collected few autographed pictures or other mementos, kept no diary, made no preparation for writing a postjob book. He considers the contact and association he's had with many "wonderful men and women" ample reward.

Of Autumnal Love

SINCE the announcement of Vice President Barkley and Mrs. Carleton Hadley's engagement, romance and, of course, warm love have made more headlines than cold and hot war, taxes, strikes. And, spontaneously, it would seem, the gazettes have been sprinkled with small items—a man 78 marrying, a man 86 dittoing and even, over in sunny Italy, a gentleman of 78 becoming pappy to twin girls.

So, love in the upper-age brackets became worth a little investigation. Surprisingly, the seemingly uncomplicated word "love" may be spelled in a diverting number of ways:—lufu, luve, lou, loove, louf, loof, lofe, luf, lufue, luif, luwe, luyf, luiff, lwiff and even loif.

Technically, love means "The disposition or state of feeling with regard to a person which (arising from recognition of attractive qualities, from instincts of natural relationship, or from sympathy) manifests itself in solicitude for the welfare of the object and usually also in delight in his presence and desire for approval, warm affection, attachment."

Love works in a surprising way. There's no age limit, and statistics show it's not unusual for men (and women) of the Vice President's age to feel all these nice, above-listed emotions. The State of Massachusetts, a sane and unsensational Commonwealth, made a recent survey which showed that in one year some 140 men and women, between the ages of 69 and 79, were married. Of this number 116 were males, of whom 10 were single up to the instant of the matrimonial plunge: 98 widowers, 8 divorced.

Ten men over 80 were wed in Massachusetts, of whom 9 were widowers and one divorced. Out in Oklahoma, where emotions are naturally more rugged than in New England, a man 86 years old recently entered the state of matrimony and two cradle-snatchers took on brides 57 years their juniors.

More Gerontology

THE DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE, which includes the Bureau of the Census, in 1945 went to the trouble of whipping up an instructive chart indicating the total chance of marriage for persons in this country over 65 years of age. Out of a total of 9.8 percent of single males, some 1.9 percent in this age bracket will marry and out of a population of 9.3 percent similarly mature females, some 0.8 percent will acquire husbands.

Other interesting facts proved by statistics are that as men grow older they tend to marry women increasingly younger than themselves; that widowed persons tend to select the widowed, divorced the divorcees and those both widowed and divorced seem to single out persons in similar conjugal condition!

So, no matter how you look at it, statistically as well as emotionally, the Vice President is acting strictly according to Hoyle.

Mme. Pandit Slates Talk

Tickets for her lecture, first in the Washington Town Hall series of 10 Monday night talks, will be sold to the public separately although the rest of the series will be on a subscription basis.

Following the Indian Ambassador in the series will be Bennett Cerf, discussing "Changing Styles in American Humor," December 5; William L. Shirer, analyzing the role of America in international affairs, December 19; Marc Connelly, explaining "What I Have Learned From the Theater," January 16; Lowell Thomas and his son, reporting on their "Around the World" trip, January 23; Aubrey Eban, speaking on Israel, February 6; Ilka Chase, "Speaking of Myself," February 27, and Sir Hubert Wilkins, discussing "The Arctic and Its Influence on World Affairs," March 13.

The January 3 program, an international forum, will be moderated by Paul Douglas, former Senator from Illinois. Speakers for this forum, and for the March 27 lecture, will be announced later.

The series is produced by Karla Hill. Tickets are being handled through Brentano's book store on F st.

FUR—made of rayon-cotton cloth—goes to college with Anne Diffenderfer, pretty blond senior at George Washington University. Full-swing skirt is topped with jacket in contrasting shade. Skirt colors include gold, blue, white and aqua. Jacket comes in ginger

It's Just Fur Fun, This Youthful Fad

New Fabric Looks Like Broadtail

By Peggy Preston

IN HIGH fashion circles they are treating fur in the manner of fabric. But the whimsical young set has reversed the trend. Its members are hailing skirts and jackets of a rayon-cotton cloth that simulates fur.

It's all in the interest of fun and variety, you understand. Teen and college fashions have a refreshing way of steaming along under their own power. Daring, not dollars, is often the price of a "rage" item, be it a bracelet, kerchief or evening wrap. The main point is—don't be dull.

So it follows that the introduction in Washington of a fabric that looks like silky broadtail or moleskin should be of interest. It's novel and inexpensive. Above all, it's amusing.

We asked Anne Diffenderfer, George Washington University senior, to try on some of these cloth-fur pieces, using a wide skirt, gathered at the waistband as the basic item. Miss Anne, a tall, rather regal lassie, took one quick look and chuckled: "It's certainly different—I'll say that for it." Then she added, after she got a good look, "It's cute, too."

Has Its Possibilities

AT ANY rate, Anne was definitely interested. It certainly seemed that a girl with a little imagination could make something out of that cotton skirt with its dull sheen and its rough pile surface of silken fur. The fabric was heavy enough to double for jersey; sleek enough to substitute for faille. And Anne, who has made a habit of working part time during her college years in order to earn "clothes" money, thought it had possibilities.

It could go through a day in this manner, for instance:

9 A. M. The skirt, in any one of a variety of colors, including gold, aqua, blue or white, could be matched with a twin cashmere sweater set. With it could go a jacket in matching fabric and contrasting shade (preferably ginger or blue). Such an outfit, warm and comfortable, would be suitable for classes, lunch and any early afternoon event.

4 P. M. If the late afternoon called for a sorority meeting, tea or reception, a jersey blouse could be added.

8 P. M. The skirt has real magic—it becomes a dance frock, swirling from a tight, red belt of the same fabric. With it Anne wears a sleeveless boucle sweater with emblem embroidered in red, black and gold threads. She adds gold kid shoes, a pair of pearl bracelets, an evening bag—she's ready for the party. And all with the one skirt!

By Jack Lartz—The Washington Post

SINCE thrift is the better part of fashion for Anne, who works part time to help finance her college course, she does not hesitate to let the skirt do triple-duty. Here, it is ready to go to a Saturday night dance. She matches it with a white boucle evening sweater. Available in Women's Department, Young Men's Shop

Anne, one of the university's most popular girls, has had many honors heaped on her blond head in the past 3½ years—though the official title of "Best Dressed" has never come her way, probably because no such moniker exists in her circles. Her most recent fame came when she was voted Home Coming Queen.

In addition she can claim the coveted title of Apple Blossom Princess from GWU; Dream Girl of Pi Kappa Alpha and Sweetheart of Sigma Chi.

Pointing for the Big Feast

Give Thanks This Year for Lower Turkey Prices

By Lucia Brown

FEASTING will be cheaper this Thanksgiving than it was way back in 1948 A.D.

Thank Tom Turkey and his tribe for this happy situation. They raised a big family this year, whereas in 1948 they had fewer offspring than in 10 years past. Market experts are predicting that the price tag on your Thanksgiving bird will be around 15 cents a pound lower than last year.

Quotations in Washington last week were in line with their prognostications, though there may be changes before November 24. At one chain store where turkey (noneviscerated variety) was 73 cents a pound last November it's now 59 cents.

$1.32 a Head

SPURRED on by this cheerful fact, let's do a little preliminary figuring on the cost of this Thanksgiving's dinner. Taking a mythical menu fairly in tune with tradition, it figures out to about $1.32 per person this year, compared with $1.44 last year. Here's the menu:

Grapefruit Juice Cocktail
Roast Turkey and Dressing
Whipped Potatoes
Buttered Broccoli
Cranberry Sauce Celery Curls
Hot Rolls
Tossed Green Salad
Pumpkin Pie, Whipped Cream
Coffee

Actual cost of food consumed by four with such a menu would be $5.27 compared with $5.76 last year (allowing a pound of turkey apiece.) Your outlay for provisions would be greater than this, but there would be considerable food left over for future meals. If you had bought the groceries, including a 10-pound turkey, in a local chain store last week, you would have handed the cashier $10.25 instead of last year's $11.35.

Ups and Downs of It

The 10-pound turkey would cost only $5.90 compared with $7.30 in 1948. Cranberries are 19c a pound in this store now as against 25c last year. Celery is several cents a bunch less, too. On the other hand, a number of items are more expensive.

Biggest difference is in the price of coffee, though of course the total consumed at one meal isn't great. This store's own brand is now 72 cents a pound compared with 52 cents last Thanksgiving. Grapefruit juice is higher, too—two cans for 27c instead of last year's three for the same price. Lettuce comes to about 20c a head now instead of 13c; potatoes are 7c a pound instead of 4c; and onions about 8c a pound instead of 6c.

Pi Beta Phis Plan Display of Handicrafts From Tennessee Settlement

By Tom Kelley—The Washington Post

ACTIVE Pi Beta Phis at George Washington University assisted alumnae club members last week in unpacking and arranging brooms, aprons and dolls made at the fraternity's Settlement School in Gatlinburg, Tenn. Checking the items are (left to right) Gladys James, Joyce Ebel, Sue Lovewell and Dodee Keebler. The assortment will be displayed and sold Tuesday, November 15, 3 to 9 p. m., at 2129 G st. nw. Sponsoring the annual sale is the Washington Alumnae Club of Pi Beta Phi

By Genevieve Reynolds

BACK IN 1912 a band of serious-minded fraternity women puzzled over adopting a welfare activity. Miss Emma Harper Turner, then leader of the Pi Beta Phis in Washington, suggested aiding the mountain folk in Tennessee.

As a direct result of her proposal, the national fraternity founded the Pi Beta Phi Settlement School in Gatlinburg that same year.

At that time Gatlinburg's sole educational facility consisted of one teacher who was paid $30 a month. Some 200 families lived on the steep mountainside or along various creeks, and their children attended the one room-one teacher school.

So the Pi Phis moved in to set up what now has become their most important, national altruistic work—the settlement project. Initial enrollment of 14 pupils at the Settlement School has jumped to 600. This year there are 15 teachers in the 12-grade school.

Children, Families Taught

ON THE 100 acres of school property can be found a health center, a girls' dormitory, a boys' dormitory, a teachers' cottage, an elementary school building, the Ogle Cabin Museum, a vocational training and high school building, a handicraft building, an Arrowcraft shop, a barn, sheds, chickenhouses and garages.

In addition to the full school curriculum students and their families in the community are taught the native crafts of weaving, basketry and furniture making. Under the supervision of the fraternity, through its Arrowcraft Shop, home crafts by the mountain women are carried on. Each year articles fashioned from these hand woven textiles are sold throughout the United States by alumnae groups. Proceeds go to the school and for weaving instructions.

The Washington Alumnae Club of Pi Beta Phi will hold its annual display and sale of handwoven articles on Tuesday from 3 to 9 p. m. in the Pi Phi chapter rooms at George Washington University, 2129 G st. nw. Included among the items for sale will be luncheon sets, towels, aprons, scarfs, purses, afghans, knitting bags, potholders, fireplace brooms, baskets, cookbooks, Christmas wrappings and calendars.

Pi Phis Long Active

EVER SINCE the District of Columbia Alpha Chapter was founded in 1889 at George Washington University (then the Columbian University) Pi Phis have been active in the Nation's Capital. Four years after the first active chapter was formed, the Washington Alumnae Club was organized. Currently there are nearly 700 resident members in this area. In its 56 years of existence the local alumnae club's membership has been drawn from 96 chapters in colleges and universities throughout the country and Canada.

"First Lady" of the fraternity, nationally and locally is Miss Margaret Truman. She is the second Pi Phi to live in the White House. Mrs. Calvin Coolidge was the first.

Founded in 1886 at Monmouth College in Illinois, the Pi Beta Phi Fraternity was the first of the women's national fraternal organizations. Although a women's organization, it bears the name fraternity generally associated with men's groups. According to legend no one had coined the word sorority at that early date.

Supports War Orphan

ALONG with the 232 organized alumnae clubs, the Washington group actively participated in educational and philanthropic work. Besides helping to maintain the Settlement School, the local club also supports a young war orphan in Finland.

Much of the alumnae work here is centered around the active chapters at George Washington and Maryland Universities. They assist the college girls in various ways. For example, generous help was given to help finance the new George Washington University Hospital, by both active and alumnae groups. Monthly meetings are held with programs based primarily on local and national work of the fraternity.

It was a Washington Pi Phi, Mrs. E. A. Nesbitt, who first conceived and later founded the Washington Panhellenic Association. This association promotes and coordinates the various women's fraternities and carries on scholarship and charity work of its own. Last year it made a notable contribution to the Cancer Fund.

Individually Pi Phis engage in social service, cultural and business activities in the city. Mrs. Frank F. Nesbitt has been a volunteer with the U. S. O. since its inception; Mrs. J. S. LaRue is head of the Florence Crittenton Home; Mrs. R. H. Pledger is an active worker with the home. Presently Mrs. Pledger is starting a new Thrift Shop. Mrs. Benjamin Harrison Lingo is a leader in the Children of the American Revolution as well as the D. A. R.

Miss Mary K. Lutz, current alumnae president, is managing editor of the Military Engineer.

Founded upon the ideals of education and social service, Pi Beta Phis continue to carry out the original aim of the fraternity.

Women's City Club to Mark 30th Anniversary

By Nicha Souré

SOME people call it the pearl anniversary, others the diamond. Whatever the name, the Women's City Club will be busy celebrating their thirtieth birthday this week.

This afternoon's program will be a dedication ceremony when the American flag and the Women's City Club banner will be dedicated on their birthday month. The Rev. Canon Richard Williams of the Washington Cathedral will be the guest speaker at the meeting which will be followed by the pearl, or diamond, tea.

The highlights of the club's history, as well as the fashions, literature, music and dances of the 30-year period, will be presented at the club at a pageant on Thursday at 8 p. m. Earlier in the afternoon, from 3 to 5:30 p. m., there will be a tea and open house at the club, 1733 I st., with Mrs. Carl Casey as hostess.

56 Women Formed Nucleus

THE pageant, "Through the Years," will relive some of the great moments as well as the trials in the growth of the Women's City Club. The story of the club began on October 8, three decades ago, when 56 women in the city of Washington opened their morning mail to find this communication:

"Notice of meeting at 1710 Eye st. nw., October 9, 1919 (Thursday) to consider the organization of a club for women."

There were several women's clubs in Washington in that time, but they all had limited memberships due to special requirements. The women who envisioned the Women's City Club felt there was a need for a women's club of broad scope in the Capital. Bearing out their idea was the fact that 32 of the 56 women who received the notice attended the meeting and about a dozen others telephoned or wrote expressing their interest.

Mrs. Mussey in Chair

MRS. ELLEN SPENCER MUSSEY, cofounder of the Washington College of Law and a civic leader in the community, took over the temporary chairmanship of the organization and the women went to work.

The first item of paramount importance to be considered was the meeting place. The housing siuation was a problem in those days, too. The women put their heads together, found that if the club were to have a home, it would have to be bought—and in order to buy a home, the club would have to be incorporated. Mrs. May Moyers McElroy, who later became the chairman of the committee on by-laws, drew up the required papers and 22 Jackson pl. was purchased.

So, the Women's City Club found itself, in less than five weeks from its inception, holding its sixth meeting in its own clubhouse on November 12, 1919. Six days later, the proposed by-laws were presented and adopted and the club was launched.

Smokers Win Out

BUT the club's problems were by no means over. In 1920 the club was equipped with a dining room, bedrooms, library, powder rooms and, after a spirited club meeting, with a smoking room. The smoking room posed a problem since in those days indulgence by women was a matter for hot debate.

After a heated discussion, the votes were counted and the "ayes" had it. For several years, a room was set aside for the "devotees of the weed," but, as smoking became more prevalent among women, the segregation was discarded and now smoking is permitted in all the rooms.

One of the memorable occasions in the growth of the club was the visit of Mme. Curie to this country. The members raised $200 toward the purchase of radium and presented it to Mme. Curie.

When Colonel Charles Lindbergh made his memorable flight across the Atlantic, the club presented him with a hand-tooled leather volume of clippings from the Washington newspapers covering this feat. That the gift was appreciated is evidenced by the fact that he has referred to it over the radio as one of his prized possessions.

Assisted in Projects

NOT only have the civic-minded members of the Women's City Club participated in movements for the betterment of the community, but they also have assisted in many notable historical projects. To name a couple, the club purchased bricks in the restoration of Wakefield, George Washington's birthplace, and they contributed a stone to the Washington Cathedral.

Among the club's District projects have been the advocacy of the rights of women to jury service; the location of the new airfield at Gravelly Point; the Alley Housing Bill; the Juvenile Court Bill; pedestrian traffic control.

The formation of the National Symphony Orchestra was another local project which interested the club and since it became a reality, the members have contributed generously to its support.

When the building of an abattoir in nearby Virginia was being considered, the club members went to work. They argued that not-delectable odors would drift to the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier, the White House and, incidentally, to the Women's City Club. The building of the abattoir was blocked.

Today there are language class meetings in Spanish and French. Meetings devoted to musical subjects have proved popular with the members. And the club has continued its interests in civic-minded projects.

She Breaks Sleep of 30 Centuries

Some women get their greatest thrills from riding horses, stunt-hopping in airplanes or shooting big game in Africa. Others are happy over a new dress or hair-do. But to Dr. Rebeca Carrion Cachot of Lima, Peru, most exciting moment is the discovery of an ancient mummy.

The director of the Peruvian Museum of Anthropology and Archeology came to this country to escort a 300-year-old mummy of Paracas to the Museum of Natural History in New York. When she landed, she found that she couldn't bring the ancient one ashore. She solved the problem by obtaining entrance papers for the "first Peruvian immigrant of 3000 years ago to enter the United States."

In Washington for a few days, she left the Paracas mummy on exhibit in New York. However, she brought plenty of photographs and first-hand lore. She addressed the Cultural Activities Department of the Organization of American States at the Pan American Union Thursday night. Other groups will hear of her exploits and excavations at future meetings.

Brown-eyed, erudite Dr. Cachot has been present and assisted in the excavation of some 20 mummies in the Paracas peninsula, south of what now is Lima. According to this expert "one of the highest civilizations of ancient Peru is that of Paracas, whose culture reached a degree of development in the arts and sciences not surpassed by contemporary or later civilizations."

Seems that the women of that time didn't get the elaborate burials afforded their menfolk. To date none of the funeral fardels contain mummies of women, observes Dr. Cachot.

The archeologist became interested in excavations through research. Now she prefers the actual digging expeditions for sheer fun. There's still plenty of research for her, too. Besides her unique post at the National Museum, she's chief of the Institute of Anthropology at San Marcos University, where she received a doctorate in history and investigation. Founded in 1551, San Marcos is the oldest institution of learning in the Western Hemisphere.

Dr. Cachot is the South American chief of the Institute of Andean Research of New York. Withal, she's found time to write many learned books. Among the better known ones are "La Mujer y el Nino en el Antiguo," and "Paracas Elementos Culturales."

"A knowledge of the past is essential to present understanding of relations between North and South America," concludes the distinguished visitor.

French Duchess Will Lecture

The Duchess de la Rochefoucauld will speak at the home of Dr. Paul Douglass, president of American University, on Thursday. Her subject will be: "La Femme Francaise," (The French Woman.)

She is one of three official lecturers sent here by the French government to speak in the United States and Canada. Since 1931, she has been president of the National Union for Women, an organization striving for the political rights of women.

The duchess has lectured at Oxford, Brussels, Rome, Berne, Madrid, Lisbon and numerous cities and universities in France. Her books are on philosophy, poetry, rights of women. She has also written several novels.

The lecture and tea are being sponsored by the Junior Alliance Francaise of American University.

By Woodrow Wilson—The Washington Post

TUESDAY'S the night Fairlington couples by the scores wash their dinner dishes in double time so they can rush away to the weekly meeting of the Fairlington Players. But for the last week or so Mr. and Mrs. F. Deen Evans have had to rush away just about every night to work with the Players. Sue Evans is directing the Players in "Blithe Spirit" which will open a four-night run Wednesday

ELVIRA, the "Blithe Spirit," played by Miss Betty Caldwell of Fairlington, is getting a few pointers by Director Sue Evans on how to break a bottle in a rage, while other members of the cast look on. The Fairlington Players spend several nights a week rehearsing their production at Lady Pope's dancing studio

MARY PRAY CONLIN, who plays the second wife in "Blithe Spirit," and Doug McClish (the husband—Charles) iron out a problem about cues in their play. The top performers of the Fairlington Players were cast in this production since only perfect timing and flawless dialogue do justice to the Noel Coward classic

Try for a Baby-Sitter Tuesday Nights!

Little Theater's a Big Magnet in Fairlington

By Norma Lanum

EVER TRY TO GET a baby-sitter on a Tuesday night in Fairlington?

If so, you probably know you have to make your bid early since there's a sitters' shortage then.

The reason? Well, Tuesday's the night Fairlington couples by the score wash the dinner dishes in double time and shuffle the kids off to bed early so they can rush away to the weekly meeting of their little theater group.

These are the Fairlington Players who comprise the neighborhood theater group which, although still in its infancy, is one of the biggest "little theaters" in the Washington area.

And these are the folks who keep the phone wires hot for sitters on Tuesdays.

"Blithe Spirit" Next

SINCE ITS organization last January, Fairlington Players, Inc., has put on three successful full-scale productions: "Pursuit of Happiness," "Dear Ruth," and "The Night of January 16." The fourth, Noel Coward's neo-classic "Blithe Spirit," will open its four-night run Wednesday at the Fairlington Elementary School.

The group has a handsome bank account and just dozens of talented amateur actors and enthusiastic supporters.

But wherein lies the vast popular appeal of the neighborhood theater group? The Fairlington housewives can tell you. "It's like having two completely separate lives," says Sue Evans, mother of four young daughters and director of "Blithe Spirit."

Mrs. Evans, who studied drama at Cornell and also toured with the University Experimental Players, spends the entire day taking care of her girls and the baby daughter of a neighbor (that makes five, in all).

Evenings for the Cause

BUT after the girls are tucked in for the night Mrs. Evans gets busy on the play. One night it might be dummying the program with her husband, F. Deen Evans, another enthusiastic Fairlington Player; the next evening she might conduct a lines rehearsal at the home of one of the members.

As opening night draws near, Sue Evans' work multiplies until there's barely time for any sleep. "I holler at the girls all day and holler at the cast all night." But she's always pleased as Punch with the results.

Mary Pray Conlin who moved here last February with her husband, Joseph, of the Veterans Administration, is one of the newest additions to the Players—and, one of its most competent performers.

Widely Experienced

"KIP" Conlin has been doing theater, radio and choreography work ever since she got out of school, but quit her job on arriving in Parkfairfax. (It's adjacent to and almost a part of Fairlington.)

So naturally when she went to the Players' performance of "The Night of January 16" Mrs. Conlin felt the urge to get behind the footlights again. She joined the Players a month ago and now has the second feminine lead in the "Spirit." She's Ruth, second wife of Charles, who is haunted throughout the play by the ghost of his first wife, Elvira.

Active in the Group

HER dramatics work with the Fairlington Players is just one of the several activities Betty Farwell tackles with catholic enthusiasm. Besides prepping on her role as Mme. Argati, the clairvoyant of "Blithe Spirit," Mrs. Farwell is collaborating on the score of a new musical the Fairlington Players will begin rehearsing in a few weeks. Also, she spends long hours politicking in her real-life role as an Arlington County Democratic committeewoman.

No matter what piece is in rehearsal, the remainder of the Players (those not cast in the production) meet each Tuesday for group readings, lectures, one-act plays and panel discussions at St. Clement's Church in Fairlington. There's always something doing, and lots of Fairlingtonites eager to take part.

Ballivian-Simms Wedding

St. Mary's Chapel of the Washington Cathedral was the scene of the wedding November 11 of Miss Barbara Anne Simms to Hugo D. Lanza-Ballivian. The Rev. J. C. Runkle, rector of Grace Episcopal Church in Wilmington, Del., performed the ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Carl J. Simms of Washington and the bridegroom the son of Mrs. Carmen Ballivian V. de Lanza of La Paz, Bolivia.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was costumed in ivory brocade with a lace mantilla. She wore a jeweled comb, a gift of the bridegroom's mother, and carried a white prayerbook. Miss Joanne Simms was her sister's maid of honor. Brig. Gen. Hugo Ballivian, Military and Air Attache to the Bolivian Embassy, was best man. The usher was Jorge Ballivian-Espinosa of La Paz.

Mrs. Edna C. Raum announces the engagement of her daughter, Phyllis Miriam, to Jerome Leonard Bernstein, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Herman J. Bernstein.

Miss Raum is a graduate of George Washington University where her fiance also was a student.

Miss Danielson to Wed the Rev. Strachan

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Ely Danielson of Groton and Boston, Mass., announce the engagement of their daughter, Marion, to the Rev. Malcolm Strachan, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Strachan of Brooklyn, N. Y.

Chief and Veep Are Exemplars

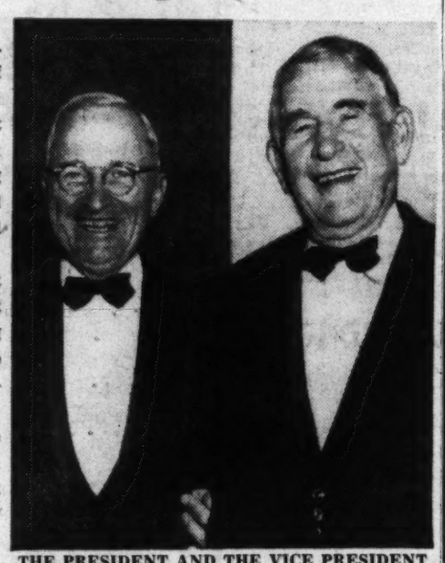
If You're Mingling After Nightfall You Should Don the Proper Garb

By Gregory Carmichael

IF YOU WEAR a dinner jacket with leopard-faced lapels this winter you'll be—unusual. If you wear a dinner jacket with an old-fashioned wing collar you'll be out of style. If you don't wear a jacket at all, likely as not you'll stay at home and entertain the dog. Face it men, evening clothes are here to stay, and in formal-minded Washington they head the list of sartorial "musts."

The old story (man made) "they just don't have any decent evening clothes in stock" is not acceptable anymore, especially when clothing stores everywhere are literally stuffed to the rafters with fine grosgrains, silks, satins, cashmeres, and evening worsteds.

The tired excuse "I need a business suit more than dinner clothes" is equally unacceptable in view of the fact that more and more important business deals are being consummated over fine brandies and black ties.



THE PRESIDENT AND THE VICE PRESIDENT
. . . impeccably dressed gentlemen

In Washington—from October until April of every year—most men have occasion to wear a dinner jacket at least six times during the season. How many times did you have to forego the pleasure of a really fine evening last year simply because you were unable to live up to the invitation which pointedly requested "black tie." As a matter of fact, you'd be surprised at the number of men today who still aren't quite sure what the phrase "black tie" means.

To be specific, if an invitation requests your presence in B.T. you're expected to arrive at the specified time dressed in semiformal evening wear. To be absolutely correct your jacket will be either single or double-breasted—black or blue-black—with either high-fitting lapels or a shawl collar. Obviously your trousers must be of the same color and material as the jacket and the braid running down the seam on the side must be of the same material which faces your jacket lapels. This matching is important.

Cinch on That Weskit

You should always wear a waistcoat with a single-breasted dinner jacket. The waistcoat will hold the shirt in place and mold your figure into a semblance of balance with the rest of your costume. Waistcoats, incidentally, can be either single or double-breasted, midnight blue or black—never white for semiformal wear.

If you like to put on a show for the favorite date you're absolutely correct to choose the fanciest shirt front imaginable. Starched pique, waffle front, or just plain linen—all are right for semiformal wear and you can't go wrong just so long as you remember that—no matter what the shirt front—the collar is always turned down.

After you've let yourself go with your evening shirt, slow up for a minute and select any one of three black—or midnight blue—bow ties. The only really acceptable neckpieces for evening wear today are the ones which have square, pointed, or butterfly ends. The material must match the facing on your coat collar. Here again it's important to remember that all accessories for men's evening wear must match.

Most men wear hats during the winter time and almost all men wear the wrong hat with evening duds. The only right hat for a dinner jacket is the time-tested black—or blue-black Homburg.

Please Omit Sparklers

WHEN IT comes to jewelry and other accessories for semiformal attire most men make the mistake of wearing every available stud and cufflink in the house. Here, again, most men are wrong. According to evening protocol, plain gold, mother-of-pearl, or enamel are the only correct jewelry accessories for semiformal attire. Precious stones are absolutely tabu in the case of a "black tie" appearance.

Finally, to put snap into the over-all evening picture, choose yourself a white silk muffler to stick inside your oxford gray, black, or blue overcoat. Slip a double-folded handkerchief into your outside pocket, pin a white carnation in the coat's buttonhole, and you're on your way.

Look to Your Linen

"FORMAL" evening wear means "tails." Your coat will have a tail reaching just below the back of the knee. Trousers will be of the same material as the tailcoat with a single silk or satin braid running down the seams; here, again, the material of which the braid is formed must match your coat lapels.

For formal wear you always wear a waistcoat of white pique, single or double-breasted. Your shirt must have a starched bosom with cuffs which are not folded back. No frills when it comes to formal evening shirts; they must be fashioned from either plain linen or fine pique. And if you must have a wing collar, here's your chance—with formal evening wear you can sport nothing else!

Around the collar—with the clasp showing in the back—goes your white tie and this—my friends—clinches the "formal" effect.

Finally, if you're called to attend a formal daytime wedding, reception, or to make a diplomatic call, stick to the precedents.

Choose a cutaway coat of either cheviot or worsted fabric, black or oxford gray, with or without braid. Your trousers must be striped or shepherd pattern with no cuffs. Always wear a waistcoat—single or double-breasted—of white, buff, or gray washable fabric. Your shirt must be white, with either a stiff or formal pleated front; the collar, either wing or turned down.

Jobé Says... Tunic Bridges Silhouettes

WHENEVER there is a change in silhouette, we find fashions arising that are a bridge from one to another.

The tunic dress which appeared again in almost every Paris collection, is a perfect transition fashion. It belongs to the incoming slim silhouette by virtue of its narrow underskirt. Yet, the tunics themselves are full, with all the graceful flattery of full skirts.

On the Move

Drowsing C. & O. Canal, Empty Towpath Reborn

By Dorothy E. Boyle

EVEN THOUGH limited in scope, this column must include some details in order to explain the affection in which one part of Georgetown is held by those who know or have followed its history. Like many of the historic old houses that fell on evil times and are now restored to usefulness and beauty, the old canal looks forward again to a happier and more respected existence.

While making surveys for Lord Fairfax in the upper Potomac and Shenandoah valleys, George Washington dreamed of a system of navigation that might provide easy access between the fairly well-established East and the expanding frontiers of the West. His persistent efforts organized the Potowmack Canal Co. in 1785. He was its first president and also the first subscriber donating 500 pounds to the project. (In those days laborers received $8 a month). Despite labor and financial difficulties the company carried on doggedly for 43 years and about 1800 the canal was opened to navigation. Although the canals and locks were considered a great engineering feat, the improvements to the river channel were inadequate and by 1823 the company surrendered its charter and rights to the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal Co.

Influenced by the success of the Erie Canal, the new company continued Washington's dream and on July 4, 1828, President John Quincy Adams dug the first shovelful of earth for an extension from Little Falls. On the very same day, the venerable Charles Carroll of Carrollton was laying the first stone of the railroad in Baltimore. By the time the canal was completed to Cumberland, 22 years later, its great rival, the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, was already reaching out almost to the Ohio River at Wheeling. "The Old Ditch" could no longer compete in spite of the fact that by 1870 as many as 540 boats carrying flour, grain, lumber and coal were navigating the canal. In 1890, trustees filed a bill against the canal company asking that receivers be appointed and the canal sold. It remained in active use, however, until 1924 and was then abandoned for more modern transportation methods.

From then until 1938 the years are best left unremembered but on September 28 of that year, Secretary Harold Ickes presented a check for two million dollars to the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad as payment for the 189-mile stretch which the Federal Government is adding to the National Park Division.

In the old Masonic Lodge built in 1810 and converted into four apartments in 1948 at the northwest corner of the towpath and Thomas Jefferson st., Alfred D. Morgan of the State Department and William Stevens of another Government agency share the apartment that was formerly the lodge meeting room.

In 1947, Charles A. Baird, secretary for 10 years to former Representative George W. Gillie of Indiana, saw the possibilities of towpath restoration and purchased 3065 and 3067 from Marion H. Britt. These, the far-visioned Mr. Baird remodeled into duplex apartments in 1948. Now, 3065, which is entered through a side terrace with white gate, is leased to Miss Ruth Ellen Thomas and Miss Ernestine Hamburg, both Government secretaries.

The house with the little green door at 3067 is occupied by Miss Marie M. L. Gysen of Holland, an employe of the International Monetary Fund who moved to the towpath because the canal reminded her of her native land.

Thirty Sixty-nine was purchased in October, 1947, by Robert C. Aldredge, chief librarian for the United States Weather Bureau, from Marion H. Britt through the office of Tabler, Inc., and remodeled in 1948 along modern lines. It is occupied by Mr. Aldredge and his mother and Mr. John Hays.

Native "towpathers" and keepers of the canal barge live at 3071. They are Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Miller and their sons, Arthur and Captain Gus who runs the canal barge. The little house which they have occupied for 23 years was formerly the old tavern part of the inn now identified as the Towpath Apartments on 31st st. and which we will tell you about in another column.

Charles A. Baird, Indiana newspaperman and former Navy lieutenant who now remodels houses as an avocation, purchased 3073 and 3075 from Vernon E. House in 1948 and the remodeling of both houses has just been completed. Mr. Baird occupies 3073 and leases 3075, which boats a two-sided central fireplace in the living room and beamed ceilings in the bedrooms.

Thirty Seventy-five in the block of houses also referred to as "Rainbow Row," is occupied by Miss Lubitsa Nenadovich, who is with the biographical information section of the State Department; Miss Betty Lou Firstenberger, just back from Turkey where she taught English for three years in the American College at Istanbul, also with the State Department; Miss Susan Cane and Miss Clarissa Craig, both Government secretaries. This is the first time these four friends have been together since their graduation in 1946 from the School of Advanced International Studies. Many arguments ensue over the correct name for the old canal. Lubitsa calls it "the little Danube," Betty Lou, "the little Bosphorus," Kissy (that's Clarissa) insists it is "little Venice" and Susan calls it as she sees it.

About Buying Man's Suit

My husband needs to buy a new suit. What are the materials which will give the best wear, hold a press and not develop a shine? R. H.

The answer to this question and many others concerned with the selection of a man's suit is to be found in a recently issued pamphlet called "Buying Men's Suits," by Clarice L. Scott, clothing specialist for the Bureau of Human Nutrition and Home Economics, United States Department of Agriculture.

Starting out with the admission that modern manufacturing can and does make cloth which feels and looks better than it is, Miss Scott sets about to enumerate all the ways in which a purchaser can judge the true worth of the fabric and the suit into which it is made.

Suits which contain wool are required by law to show a label which gives the following information: 1. Wool fiber content—the kind of wool and how much wool the suiting contains. 2. The percentage, if any, of fibers other than wool. 3. The name of the manufacturer or persons selling the suit. Look for this label!

Information on the label applies only to the outer cloth in the suit. The quality of the lining and foundation materials are not mentioned on the label and these are most important to the life-long fit and wearability. But more about that later.

Several Kinds of Wool

To return to the outer cloth, the terms on the label used to describe the kind of wool are "wool," "reprocessed wool" and "reused." The term "wool," according to the author, means that all fibers are animal, probably sheep or mohair. When labeled "wool" it may be made of new fiber or reclaimed fiber from spun or knitted products never previously worn. "Reprocessed wool" is made from scraps and cuttings of fabrics that have never been used or worn. "Reused wool" is made from worn or used fabrics—the kind that old clothes and rag dealers collect.

How these wools are spun and woven has much to do with the fit and wearing qualities of the finished suits. Fabrics which have been made of long fibers, spun tightly and then woven closely and firmly will hold a press and wear longer than loosely woven materials. Examples of hard-finished closely woven fabrics are serge, sharkskin and gabardine. Serges and gabardines which have no nap will develop a shine with wear.

Tells With Pictures

The bulletin includes 12 illustrations of fabrics commonly found in men's suits, giving with the picture of each the advantages, disadvantages and characteristics. Most helpful information for the gentleman who has never given the fabric in his suit much thought beyond the color!

And speaking of color, when selecting a suit you should pick a fabric which will not fade or shrink. Unfortunately there is no way to judge by yourself these important facts. The best you can do is to choose a reliable dealer and ask him for this information. Manufacturers of high-grade suits preshrink and test their fabrics for color fastness before making up. This, of course, is reflected in the cost of the garment, but greatly adds to the service and wear you will get from it.

These days, Mr. America is really buying a "pig in a poke" when it comes to foundations or inner linings which do so much to determine how a suit coat will set upon his manly shoulders. The bulletin points out that the coat front (trade term for inner lining) is actually the very foundation of the coat.

Check the Quality

In high-grade suits this front is made from high-grade hair canvas woven of goat hair spun with wool. In less expensive suits, cheaper hair canvas is used and to give it a fake crease-resistant quality the canvas is filled with glue-like sizing. Fine while the suit is new—but the sizing departs with the first cleaning, leaving a suit which droops where it is supposed to drape. In the lowest grade suits, the fronts are made of cotton materials or ordinary burlap which doesn't give any stiffness even when the suit is new.

Miss Scott cites a test which can be made to determine what sort of coat front is used in the suit you are thinking of buying. Grasp the coat front of the suit at the lapel and pull your closed hand down over it. A high-grade suit will feel lightweight and soft, not stiff, and the front will snap back into shape without a wrinkle when you let go. In a low-grade suit, the front will feel thick, bulky and crisp and when you let go you can feel wrinkles in the inside materials.

Good Suits Pressed

The workmanship on a suit does much to determine its wear and fit. Well-made suits are pressed at each step in the construction so that the shaping is actually sewed in and will not come out for the life of the suit. Very little pressing is done on lower-grade suits during construction. To give them shape, they are put on form presses that actually stamp the shape into them. This sort of shaping lasts until the suit is worn, but is lost with use and cleaning.

The bulletin contains point-by-point comparison of high, medium and low-grade suits with pictures to illustrate each point.

To get maximum wear and enjoyment from a suit, check these factors when you go suit shopping:

1. Collar sets up smooth and close to the back and sides of neck. Made so one fourth to one half inch of the shirt collar shows.
2. Firm unbroken shoulder line from neck to shoulder point.
3. Lapels and neckline hold close to the chest at all times.
4. Straight line with no wrinkles from shoulder to lower edge of the coat—back and front.
5. Easy, smooth fit through the body of the coat—not noticeably disturbed as you move about. No strain as coat is buttoned.
6. Coat long enough to cover the seat of the trousers.
7. Armholes comfortably large, but not so deep that the coat lifts noticeably as you reach.
8. Sleeves tapered, comfortably wide, but never full enough to cause unsightly wrinkles. May be long enough to cover shirt cuffs or allow ¼ to ½ inch of cuffs to show, as preferred.
9. Trousers hang straight, with creases straight up and down front and back. Creases follow straight of goods.
10. Comfortable seat fullness, without bagginess.
11. No wrinkles that draw through the crotch below the seat or against the front of the legs as you stand or walk.
12. Lower edges of legs finished so they either have one slight break at the instep, or so the cuff edges barely touch the shoes. A deep break makes trousers look too large. If the trousers legs are too long they rub against the shoes, wear out quickly and have to be repaired.

This bulletin may be secured from the Superintendent of Documents, United States Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C. The price is 15 cents.

Mrs. Fraze Found a Tenant With a Post Want Ad

"I've always had good results with Post Want Ads," says Mrs. Alvin Fraze of 307 First St. S.E. Her three-line ad offering a furnished apartment brought her several calls and a tenant.

Prefers The Post

Mrs. Fraze says that she has better luck with The Post than with other Washington newspapers. "Now that there are more rooms and apartments available," says Mrs. Fraze, "it's more difficult to find tenants. I've tried other papers, but The Post works best for me."

Put The Post to Work for You

The Post will work for you, too. Find tenants for your rooms, apartments or houses with result-getting, economical Post Want Ads. If there is a phone listed in your name, you can call in your ad and charge it. Dail NA. 4200 and ask for an ad writer.

Annapolis Activities

Navy Game Touches Off Big Weekend

Annapolis, Md., Nov. 12.—Prelude to Thanksgiving—one of the gayest seasons of the entire year—is this big weekend at the United States Naval Academy, with the Navy varsity team playing Columbia University in Thompson Stadium at the Naval Academy, the second home game this fall.

A full calendar of sports and social activities is in prospect this afternoon and tonight, and hundreds of visitors are here to enjoy the weekend with the midshipmen.

At last Saturday night's hop at the Naval Academy guests were received by Mrs. John V. Kelsey, wife of Major Kelsey, USMC, who is on duty in the executive department of the academy. Midshipman David S. Boyd, First Class, of Santa Barbara, Calif., received with Mrs. Kelsey. Hostess was Mrs. Isaac Foote Dortch, whose escort was Midshipman Robert C. Baxter, Second Class, of Rumson, N. J. The hop was for midshipmen of the first and second classes, with dancing from 9:15 p. m. to midnight.

An informal for the first, second and third classes was held on Saturday afternoon in "Smoke Hall" from 4:30 to 6:15 o'clock.

The Superintendent of the Naval Academy, Rear Admiral James L. Holloway, jr., and Mrs. Holloway entertained at the second in a series of "at homes" last Wednesday from 5 to 7 o'clock, receiving hundreds of guests in the beautifully decorated rooms of the superintendent's house.

Assisting at the tea, coffee and punch tables were Mrs. Levi T. Wilson, Mrs. Earl W. Thomson, Mrs. Robert B. Pirie, Mrs. Roy S. Glasgow, Mrs. Walter H. Price, Mrs. H. Howard Caldwell, Mrs. Robert H. Rice, Mrs. Roy E. Bishop, Mrs. John E. Fradd, Mrs. Donald F. White, Mrs. Sidney M. Kelly, Mrs. Liles W. Creighton, Mrs. Forsyth Massey, Mrs. Robert Fisher, Mrs. Jesse W. Miller, Mrs. John G. Spangler, Mrs. Wade W. Lape, Mrs. Gerard B. Creagh, Mrs. John L. Chew and Mrs. C. Elliott Loughlin.

A string ensemble from the Naval Academy Band furnished music throughout the evening.

Capt. and Mrs. Harry A. Baldridge of Wardour have returned from a two-week motor trip in the South, where a number of State archives were visited while Capt. Baldridge, director of the Naval Academy Museum, was searching for authentic John Paul Jones mementoes. The museum has the outstanding Jones collection in this country.

In Charlotte, N. C., the Baldridges were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Gossett. Mrs. Gossett is the former Miss Kitty Clayton of Annapolis, who made her home here a number of years ago. They were also guests for a few days at Tides Inn, Irvington, Va.

Mrs. Stout, wife of Capt. Richard F. Stout, head of the Naval Academy Department of Seamanship and Navigation, is one of three Maryland artists represented in the forty-eighth annual exhibition of water colors and prints at the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts in Philadelphia. Her work is a miniature portrait, done in water color on ivory.

Mrs. Stout won the Miniature Society's Medal of Honor in a previous exhibition in Philadelphia. Last winter she exhibited in the Portraits, Inc's. show in New York, and more recently in an exhibition held by the Las Angeles Society of Miniature Painters.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Mayne, of El Paso, Ill., are guests for two weeks of their son-in-law and daughter, Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. David G. Musey of St. Margarets'.

Now at home at 71 Bay Ridge dr. are Lieut. and Mrs. Lee Wright, whose wedding took place on October 25 in the chapel of the Broad Street Presbyterian Church in Columbus, Ohio.

The bride is the former Mrs. Sara Allread Owens, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Allread of Fishinger rd., Columbus.

Lieutenant Wright is the son of the late Dr. and Mrs. Wright of Hollywood, Calif. He attended the Utah Agricultural College and the naval training schools at Treasure Island and Pearl Harbor. He is now electronics officer in the department of seamanship and navigation at the Naval Academy.

Of wide interest here is the announcement made by Mrs. Pollock Gladden of Long Beach, Calif., and Pensacola, Fla., of the engagement of her daughter, Miss Edwina Blanche Gladden, to Ensign William Westfall Lee, jr., USN, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Westfall Lee of Greenville, N. C.

Miss Gladden is the daughter of Brig. Gen. Alton Arnold Gladden, USMC, of Pasadena, Calif. She is the granddaughter of the late Dr. and Mrs. William Andrew Jackson Pollock of Pensacola and the late Prof. and Mrs. Thomas L. Gladden of Annapolis.

For many years Professor Gladden was a member of the faculty of St. John's College here.

The wedding will take place in the Naval Academy Chapel on December 21.

Miss Gladden and her mother plan to come to Annapolis later this month to remain until after the wedding.

Mrs. Charles C. Slayton, wife of Captain Slayton, USN (retired), returned November 4 from an extended tour of South America, where she attended the annual convention of the Society of Travel Agents of which she is a member. The convention was held in October in Mexico City. En route home, she visited three days at Acapulco and in Guatamala City, with a former Annapolitan, Mrs. Thomas Telford Smith, wife of Major Smith, USA, of Fort Meade, who is visiting relatives there for several months. Mrs. Slayton also stopped over in Havana, Cuba, on the return trip.

The annual bazaar and turkey dinner sponsored by the Treasury Guild of St. Anne's Episcopal Church will be held on Thursday, December 1. Mrs. John K. Clark is general chairman.

Col. Kosch Honored

Officers and executives of national headquarters of the Selective Service System and their wives were hosts at a farewell party last Monday night in the Franklin and Adams Rooms of the Wardman Park Hotel in honor of Col. Lewis F. Kosch, deputy director, who is retiring from the Army after service dating back to the Mexican campaign in 1916. Colonel Kosch will shortly return to Santa Cruz, Calif., where he and Mrs. Kosch have a home.

branches of operation. She now runs a television show of her own.

In addition, the bride-to-be is a licensed pilot, having won her wings in St. Louis about four years ago.

Like Mother, Like Daughter

HERE'S news for Washington's old timers.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick M. Alger, jr., of Grosse Pointe, Mich., announce the engagement of their daughter, Suzette de Marigny Alger, to Reese Evans Howard, son of Mr. and Mrs. Graeme K. Howard of Norfolk, Conn., and Rye, N. Y.

Suzette is less well known in Washington than her mother, who was Suzette Dewey, daughter of former Representative and Mrs. Charles S. Dewey. She made her debut in 19—well about a score of years back and was a beauty and a belle of her year. Her marriage to Frederick Alger, now Michigan's Secretary of State, took place shortly after.

Former Representative and Mrs. Dewey spent the past summer in France at their ancient chateau, are now traveling in Europe and will be back in Washington late this month.

The bride-to-be, who will be married in February, was graduated from Miss Porter's School, Farmington, Conn., and attended Vassar College. She is the granddaughter of Mrs. Fred T. Murphy, also of Grosse Pointe, and the late Col. Frederick M. Alger. Gen. Russell A. Alger, one-time Governor of Michigan, United States Senator, and Secretary of War in McKinley's Cabinet, was her great-grandfather.

Mr. Howard was graduated from Deerfield Academy, Deerfield, Mass., and served three years with the Army Air Forces. He attended Yale University and is a member of Delta Kappa Epsilon. He's the grandson of Mrs. Reese Thompson Evans of Palo Alto, Calif., and the late Mr. Evans, and of the late Mr. and Mrs. Burt Estes Howard of Stanford University.

New Kind of Tour Cooks

MRS. JOHN PATERSON, just returned from England, has brought back a title with her. She United States representative of a new travel agency, established by Fortnum & Mason, London's smart specialty shop.

It was Eveline Paterson who dreamed up the idea of an "inside England" view for tourists rather than the usual hasty glance at its Westminster Abbey, and Buckingham Palace with dinner at Claridges.

With this in mind, Mrs. Paterson scouted the countryside, found friends and friends of friends who would be delighted to take paying guests. It's the perfect solution for parents unwilling to let their teen-age daughters off on the loose. The Fortnum-Mason agency plans big things for its clients who would travel by air. They've already arranged for a special trip to take passengers to the famous Grand National races in March.

Mrs. Paterson left her daughter, Virginia, in boarding school in her native England, has put Jeremy, her son, in Georgetown University. With the two children away much of the time, Eveline is thinking of selling her house and taking a small flat.

Incidentally, Jeremy, who's grown up in Washington and is now 19, has taken out his first citizenship papers, so that he will have his full citizenship by the time he's old enough to vote.

The Family Scrapbook

By Dr. Ernest O. Osborne

When most of us were kids, our folks didn't worry too much about where we were. In the small towns where we lived there were few dangers. Everyone knew everyone else. There was a kind of neighborliness that meant people felt responsible for all the children in the community.

We parents who live in large cities face a very different situation. We feel it isn't safe for youngsters to be wandering around. The heavy traffic, the many kinds of people living in any large urban center and a host of other things make us fearful. What happens is that we put restrictions on children that make it impossible for them to develop the independence and responsibility desirable in growing youngsters.

Even in the city it is possible to have experiences that will build such characteristics. As youngsters reach the age of 10 years or so, they can gradually begin to learn to get around on their own.

At first, perhaps, some older member of the family will go along to see that they understand what to do. But before long they will take pride in being able to go to the museum by themselves, to downtown stores or to other parts of the city. If they've been properly briefed on how to act and know that they always can phone home if things go wrong, there would seem to be every reason to encourage them to get around town on their own.

Leesburg News Notes

Retired Aides Honored by Episcopalians

Leesburg, Va., Nov. 12.—"Children will arise up and call them blessed" is the inscription on a silver coffee pot which, with a matching silver bowl, was presented to Miss Alice Watts Davis and Miss Lucy Landon Davis, retired Sunday school teachers, at St. James Episcopal Sunday School on Sunday morning.

"Miss Alice" had been a teacher at St. James for 75 years and "Miss Lucy" for 60 years. They are the daughters of the late Rev. Dr. Richard Terrell Davis, who was rector of St. James Church for 25 years.

The presentation was made by Dr. W. O. Bailey, superintendent of the school. Dr. Bailey said, "The example and inspiration of the lives of these Christian women have been and are a constant source of blessing to all." He quoted from Tennyson, "Kind hearts are more than coronets and simple faith than Norman blood."

The rector of St. James, the Rev. J. Manly Cobb, added words of gratitude for these two beloved teachers. George E. Ward, sr., Sunday school secretary, was tenor soloist for the occasion. Many of the sisters' wide circle of friends crowded the room for the presentation.

Members of the Loudoun Sketch Club and a few guests were present at a dinner at the Laurel Brigade Inn on Friday evening before the opening of the club's third annual exhibit in the Court House in Leesburg. The show will remain open until 10 p. m. Sunday, November 13.

Exhibiting members include Frances Allen, Laura Dupuy, Evelyn Marshall, Jean Lawrence, R. B. Lawrence, Vinton L. Pickens, Jane Pohl, Katherine Slappey, Betty Tiffany and Eugen Weisz. Entries include landscapes, portraits and figure studies and a group of paintings of old houses of Loudoun. As an added attraction, there is a display of ceramics by members of the Washington Kiln Club.

Dr. and Mrs. W. C. Bailey have as their guest Dr. Bailey's cousin, Mrs. Pierre Clement of Charleston, S. C. Also with them for the week-end were their daughter, Miss Mary Lillington Bailey, senior at American University, and Ned Bailey, student at the University of Virginia.

Mrs. J. W. Eure of Lynchburg, is the guest of her son-in-law and daughter, the Rev. and Mrs. L. C. Shearer.

Mr. and Mrs. Randolph P. Goode of Pittsburgh were week-end guests of Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Russell. Mrs. Goode will return to Loudoun on Monday to complete procedure in closing the Oatlands post office, which she operated for a number of years. She and Mr. Goode were recently married.

Miss Mollie Vesey entertained a number of her young friends at a party on Thursday evening in the cabin at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Vesey.

Miss Vivian Smith was hostess to the Junior Auxiliary on Tuesday afternoon at her home at Paeonian Springs.

Sally Reed observed her fifth birthday with a party Saturday afternoon at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. Stanley Reed.

Mrs. Peggy McNeale Moffett entertained Saturday at a dinner party honoring her brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Challis-King.

Mrs. John William Clemens will be hostess to the Woman's Auxiliary of St. James Episcopal Church at her home in Leesburg on Monday afternoon. Mrs. George E. Ward will be co-hostess. Plans will be completed for the Christmas bazaar which will be held December 5 at the Parish Hall. Mrs. Charles Lewis, delegate, gave a report of the annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary held at Winchester.

Mrs. Robert H. Patton was hostess to the Leesburg Garden Club on Tuesday afternoon. The speaker, Mrs. Lomax Tayloe of Vienna, former rosarian of the Garden Club of Virginia, spoke on "Roses."

"Brick-Lay-R"

New Device Lays 2000 Bricks Daily

See Picture, Page 7R

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va., Nov. 12 (Spl.)—A new bricklaying machine, now coming on the market, stands a good chance of revolutionizing the brick industry.

That's the opinion of over 400 brick and tile manufacturers, after viewing a demonstration of the new tool at the Structural Clay Products Industry convention, under way here at the Greenbrier Hotel.

There are two reasons for enthusiasm: First, it promises to reopen farm and rural markets for brick, now largely lost because brick-laying requires skilled labor. Secondly, the machine is designed for use of brick exclusively, and will not work with large size cement or cinder block.

2000 Bricks Daily

THE engineering firm of John S. Hodgson & Paul S. Sommers of Montgomery, Ala., has developed a remarkable series of bricklaying tools. The inventors demonstrated five different machines for laying of 8-inch solid walls, 10-inch cavity walls, masonry corners, masonry columns and circular manholes.

Construction engineers estimate one man can lay at least 2000 bricks daily with this machine on solid brick walls. In its present state of development, the "Brick-Lay-R" as it is called, does not lay finished attractive courses. A wall requires final touching up by a brick mason.

Unskilled persons, however, can operate the device while one mason does the finishing work.

The "Brick-Lay-R" operates on the principle of forms. On solid walls the rectangular machine is clamped to the first course of brick. Mortar is dumped in with a specially designed scoop, holding just the right amount. Then a screed levels mortar much like a spatula spreads cake icing. The bricks then are placed. Levels on the machine are checked for accuracy and the machine is unclamped and moved along the wall.

Now in Production

LEADERS in the brick industry say the invention will not run the skilled brick mason out of business. Rather it will give him the opportunity to become a mason contractor, employing his own unskilled crew.

For general farm buildings, other than dwellings, the Hodgson-Sommers machine seems more than adequate. It also may prove of value in construction of industrial buildings, where roughly laid fir protection walls, and walls which will be plastered, are required.

The machines are now in production and soon will be available through local brick companies and building supply dealers.

Vast Shirley Highway Area Awaits Development

Twin lanes of new Shirley Memorial Highway snake past nearby Parkfairfax and Fairlington garden apartments into the undeveloped Virginia countryside.

By Conrad P. Harness

THE newly opened Shirley Memorial Highway, from the Pentagon to its junction with U. S. Highway No. 1 at Woodbridge, Va., presents a land developer's dream—and nightmare.

Here are literally thousands of acres within 30 minutes of the White House waiting for development into picturesque homesites. The joker in the woodpile is lack of utilities—water, sewer and gas.

And no county—Fairfax in this case—nowadays puts in costly sewer lines in anticipation of land development. Home construction on a large pace comes first, near available trunk sewer lines. Any project built in the beautiful wooded acreage off the Shirley must now use wells and septic tanks.

So, present land sales in the Shirley vicinity have been confined largely to individual homesites. Business is booming.

VERNON LYNCH & SONS of Lincolnia, Va., own over 2200 acres within 2 miles of Shirley, with 500 acres actually fronting on the super highway. The firm has developed 19 subdivisions in the Fairfax County area since 1936, when they turned from farming to land brokerage. Fifteen of the subdivisions are sold out.

Three of the latest Shirley hwy. subdivisions are: Springvale, near the Shirley hwy. Springfield turn off, where one-half to acre lots sell from $500 to $1500 at 200 Units at Patuxent River, Md.

Navy Takes Action On Housing Needs

LAND at the Naval Air Station, Patuxent River, Md., has been tentatively leased by the Navy Department to a private building firm for construction of a 200-unit garden apartment project to house Navy enlisted men and their families, it was announced yesterday.

The lease will be the Navy Department's first for vitally needed housing for Naval personnel under terms of the recently enacted Wherry Bill, which provides FHA mortgage insurance for approved projects.

The lease, to Patuxent Gardens, Inc., headed by R. H. Bailey and Robert Grene, of New York, must be approved by the Armed Service Committee of Congress and the Federal Housing Administration.

Seat Pleasant Project

The builders have erected several low-cost housing projects in New York suburbs and are currently constructing Gregory Estates, a combination apartment-single family home project just over the District Line at Seat Pleasant, Md.

If the lease is approved, the builders said one-bedroom apartments would rent for $35 monthly; $45 for two bedrooms and $55 for three bedroom units. The undertaking, it is believed, represents the lowest rental scale for any armed service housing anywhere in the United States.

The Navy Department action followed by one month approval by the Army, Congress and FHA for construction of a 1000-unit apartment project at Fort Knox, Ky., with ground leased to private builders.

The Navy Bureau of Yards and Docks, hoping to ease a serious housing shortage at and near its installations, is planning a 20,000 to 25,000-unit housing program here and overseas. Outlay by civilian firms awarded leases will be between 170 and 200 million dollars.

Construction is expected to start at Patuxent in mid-November, with occupancy in June. Future leases there call for 800 more homes, with 100 allotted to officers, 300 to enlisted personnel and 37 to civilian workers. The base is a major testing ground for aircraft and equipment.

Private Financing

The proposed Patuxent project will be financed by private capital, with FHA mortgage insurance. Sponsors will be responsible for management and maintenance. Generally, similar conditions will govern the entire Navy program.

Housing facilities at the base have been mostly of a temporary or emergency nature, with some personnel living in trailers, Quonset huts and converted wartime structures.

Lack of adequate housing in and around naval shore stations, it was said, has resulted in serious morale problems. This is reflected in decreased reenlistments, expedience transfers, high percentages of emergency leaves and other administrative difficulties.

Before housing proposals are accepted from interested private sponsors, the Secretary of Defense must certify the need for such housing at bases deemed to be permanent establishments of the Department of Defense.

It must be certified that no substantial curtailment of activities is planned at installations requiring housing projects. Also, rental charges must be scaled at reasonable rates.

110 Homes Set For Arlington

A construction program of 110 semi-detached homes is planned in South Arlington by Johnson Construction Co., of Arlington. Site of the large project is 8th rd., 8th pl., Harrison st. and So. Carlyn Springs rd. Frank Martinelli is the architect.

Dwellings will be two-story, no-basement, brick and cinderblock, with a 24 by 33 floor area. Johnson Construction Co., headed by Jesse Johnson, has built some of the largest apartment and single-family housing projects in the Northern Virginia area.

Plans are completed for this housing project and sub-bids from subcontractors are being taken by the builder.

18 Homes to Be Built

John L. Shelton will build 18 semi-detached brick homes on Burbank st., near Texas ave. se., according to plans now in progress.

Building Permits Here Hit Second Highest Volume

Construction in the District of Columbia skyrocketed to the second highest volume this year, according to building permits issued by the D. C. Building Inspector's office.

Only the month of June, when permits were granted for projects worth $15,799,110, topped last month's total of $9,383,320.

Bulk of the permits, $5,489,000, was for 23 apartment buildings, with 1222 units, mostly in elevator-type apartments, to be erected in the Northwest, financed with FHA-insured mortgages. Permits also included 78 brick homes, estimated to cost $889,450.

Geographically, the new construction will be located: Northwest, 1152; Southeast, 91, and Northeast, 57.

Don't Paint House During Cold Weather

A house can be painted any time it is dry and the weather is not too cold.

Many painters warn against painting when the temperature is below 50. The paint becomes too thick to form a good bond and the paint can freeze. If the temperature drops to freezing before the paint is thoroughly dry the coating will powder and brush off.

The Western Pine Association warns that paint will not hold to wet wood. Painting should be done only when the surface of siding is thoroughly dry. Some painters recommend at least four days for wood, brick, stucco or other absorbent materials to dry after a rain.

Don't paint in a misty damp atmosphere. Even after a fog, wait for a day of sunshine or drying winds.

Painters don't start work too early in the morning. They wait until the sun has dried up night dampness.

A Rank Injustice

5710 Virginia Ave., Arlington Open Today, 1 to 6 P. M.

No, this is not "Just Another Cape Cod." Nothing could be further from the truth. For the above picture doesn't show the scores of important advantages this fine home features.

It doesn't show the many unusual labor saving electrical devices, the beautifully paneled den with the outside entrance. It doesn't show the separate cottage with 4 rooms and bath usable as a caretaker's cottage or guest house. Nor does it show that the extent of the property—⅞-acre.

It doesn't show the large living room with fireplace, the 2 large bedrooms and tiled bath on the first floor, nor the 2 twin-size bedrooms and bath on the second floor. No, it doesn't show the phone plugs and night lights in every room, nor the closet lights which go on whenever the doors are opened, nor the spacious storage attic, the full dry basement.

BUT a visit to 5710 Virginia Ave., Arlington, WILL show what a rare treasure the home really is. Such a visit will prove why you will be happy here—this year, next year and forever. Yes, this picture and our inadequate description does this fine home a real injustice.

Painted Brick Homes Less Humid Inside

Brick structures are frequently painted, particularly after they have aged for several years. This treatment gives a better outward appearance and also prevents moisture seepage and further deterioration. It has been demonstrated by scientific experimentation that painted brick structures are less humid inside. Bricks are sometimes given a clear waterproof coating in order to prevent water seepage and still retain the normal appearance of the brick.

New Floor Covering Noted For Durability and Beauty

THE perfection of new types of floor coverings has changed thinking about floors.

The modern planner says that for bedrooms, comfort and quiet can be placed before durability in importance. In the living room, appearance is paramount. In bathrooms, kitchens, laundries, playrooms, water-resistance and durability get top priority.

Subflooring determines the type of finished floor to a great extent. Concrete basement floors, for example, can be covered practicably with asphalt tile. This material is not affected by moisture and can be laid in a bed of asphalt cement. Linoleum can be used if the cellar floor has been properly built on a bed of well-drained cinders and is permanently dry. In this case, linoleum can be laid on felt, but dampness will rot it.

When a house is built on a concrete slab with radiant heating coils embedded, the thinner the finish floor, the more efficient the heating plant will be. For this reason asphalt tile often is used.

A good subfloor can be obtained for linoleum in kitchens, or other rooms with beamed frame floor construction, with sheets of structural plywood. This eliminates seams and cracks and considerably lengthens the life of linoleum.

When subfloors are laid with boards, diagonal construction is preferred over subfloors laid at right angles to joists. This not only strengthens the floor, but also permits the finished floor to be laid at right angles to either wall. Such subfloors should be covered with a layer of building paper to prevent dust and dirt from sifting through.

Hardwood has been a traditional material for finish flooring, both in tongue-and-groove strips and parquet blocks. Oak, maple and birch have been the leaders. Some hardwood flooring is shipped today completely sanded, finished and waxed at the factory. It is virtually scratch proof.

However, modern developments in other materials are greatly widening the range of selection. Cork tile, rubber tile and squares of linoleum tiles are coming into wide use. Plastics have entered the field with a brilliantly colored material made from limestone, salt and coke.

Shirley Highway Area Awaits Development

$50 down and $15 per month. Fifteen homes, in the $10,000 to $14,000 bracket, have been completed or are underway by the owners. The Lynches do no building themselves.

Lincolnia Park near the Duke st. extended cloverleaf, has 19 sites, at $1200 to $1750. Five homes are underway. Still another section, Pinecrest, about 1½ miles west of the Shirley, between Columbia Pike and Duke st. extended, is catering to larger homes, from $15,000 to $30,000. Lots there sell from $1000 to $2500.

Charles V. Lynch said the actual opening of the Shirley from Shirlington on through to Woodbridge didn't generate a rush for sites—that occurred as long as two years ago when construction of the highway was assured.

No Tourist Courts

ALL HOME SITES sold by the Lynch firm are just land—owners arrange for construction of their own homes plus wells and septic tanks. The water table is found at 25 to 35 feet in most sections.

Alert businessmen have stopped viewing the Shirley as a potential base of operations. The Fairfax County Board of Supervisors is now turning a deaf ear to requests for rezoning of Shirley hwy. frontage for business use.

Last month, by a 4-to-2 vote, the board denied the application of Vernon Lynch for rezoning 21½ acres at the northwest corner of the highway's intersection with Franconia rd. near Springfield.

Board Chairman G. Wallace Carper, who opposed the rezoning, pointed out the purpose of the highway was to bypass Route No. 1, which had become cluttered up with commercial establishments.

"If we grant this," Carper said, "I don't see how we can turn down anyone at any of the other intersections. I think we would be defeating the purpose for which the highway was built."

The board will have a hearing next month to determine if land at the Shirley hwy.-Seminary rd. cloverleaf, now zoned commercial, is to be rezoned residential.

2000-Acre Project

LAND on both sides of the Annandale rd. or Duke st. extended, just east of the large Army Quartermaster Depot, has been rezoned for a shopping center for the 2500-unit Shirley Duke Apartments, now under construction on Duke st. extended. However, the shopping center is on Duke st. extended, not Shirley hwy.

Largest project proposed for the entire Shirley hwy. area is a 2000-acre tract near the Springfield cloverleaf, 15 minutes from the Pentagon, where Carr, Inc., plans to start 200 low cost homes next year.

Over-all plan of the huge tract, if utility obstacles can be successfully overcome, is for a complete "city" of 25,000 persons. The tract has been rezoned into 17 separate rezonings, including rural, suburban, and urban residential, rural and general business and industrial zones.

Most active construction now under way off the Shirley is in the Seminary rd. area. One project of ramblers at Dowden Terrace, near the Washington-Virginia airport has had a phenomenal sales record, with $15,000 to $18,000 homes selling well in advance of construction.

A survey is now under way near Dowden Terrace for construction of a sewer line to connect with the main trunk sewer in the area. Gas lines have already been laid from the Bailey's Cross Roads area.

Engineering Contracts Take Drop of 34%

NEW YORK, Nov. 12 (AP).—Engineering construction contracts awarded this week totalled $111,289,000, a 34 percent drop from last week's $169,933,000, Engineering News-Record reported today.

The engineering construction weekly said the week's volume also was 19 percent below the $137,751,000 for the like 1948 week.

However, heavy construction for the year to date amounts to $7,005,840,000 or 16 percent above the corresponding total for last year.

Private construction contract awards for this week amounted to $47,002,000, a drop of 54 percent from last week's $102,827,000 and 26 percent from the $63,561,000 for the like week last year. The largest private contract was 10 million dollars for 1000 rental housing units at Fort Bragg, N. C.

Public construction awards totalled $64,287,000 or four percent under last week's $67,106,000 and 13 percent below the $74,190,000 for the corresponding week of 1948. The largest public award was a $15,900,000 contract for the superstructure of Maryland's Chesapeake Bay bridge.

State Dept. Makes Study Of Housing

THE State Department is out to show other nations how much American building industry has accomplished. A very comprehensive study on housing, planning and construction has been prepared for use in United States libraries and information centers abroad.

Several Washington area projects are portrayed in the collection of photographs, plans, books and special reports. Housing projects, individual homes and special public and private building are covered.

Information is included on materials and construction methods and on housing needs, costs and financing methods.

Local projects included are Buckingham, Fairlington, Cameron Valley, Parkfairfax, Arlington Village and Colonial Village apartment projects in Virginia; the co-op housing community at Bannockburn, Md.; Falkland in Silver Spring, Md., and Fairfax Village, Langston Terrace and NCHA projects in the District.

The collection was prepared as a result of numerous inquiries received from abroad on housing and planning practices in this country. It is a part of the State Department's program of international educational exchange.

Sets of the collection are being circulated abroad and a master set is on file at the State Department.

Two Lavatories in Bathroom Latest Trend in New Homes

An increasing number of new homes are being equipped with two lavatories in the bathroom, says the Plumbing and Heating Industries Bureau.

First suggested years ago as a means of increasing the usefulness of the bathroom, the idea of twin lavatories has definitely "caught on," the bureau declares.

The lavatory is the most-used fixture in the bathroom. Doubling the number of lavoratories, therefore, greatly increases the utility of the bathroom without adding greatly to space requirements or to cost.

If the size of the bathroom permits, lavatories should be installed side by side. There is some economy in piping in this arrangement as compared with having two lavatories on opposite walls. Each lavatory should be equipped with its own medicine cabinet with individual lighting.

The idea of twin lavatories is just as practical for existing bathrooms that are to be modernized as for new bathrooms, the bureau holds. The only difference is that in older houses the size of the bathroom is often limited and there may not be room for two lavoratories.

In this case, the installation of a lavatory in a bedroom or hall end may often help to relieve the traffic in the main bathroom.

Find New American House Turning 'In Its Tracks'

The typical American home is gradually "turning in its tracks," according to the National Association of Home Builders.

As a result of increased emphasis by home builders and designers on better living for all income groups, the contemporary-styled home is being oriented toward the rear or garden section of the lot, according to Carl G. Lans, technical director of the National Association of Home Builders. He based his statements on observations made during a series of coast-to-coast home building inspection trips. He said:

"Using contemporary plans, home builders are erasing the helter-skelter, catch-all back yard from the American scene. New homes in all price brackets are evidencing a trend toward 'open' planning.

"Today the American home is turning on its axis in defense against the modern enemies of pleasant living, i. e., street noises, automobile headlights and increased traffic."

Arrange Pictures More Attractively

It is not necessary to spend a great deal of money in order to have attractive pictures on your walls.

Many handsome reproductions in impeccably good taste are available. Pictures may be chosen purely as accents or to please the whim of the user.

When a picture is hung alone it must be large enough for the space it is to fill. Pictures should be hung so the center of the picture is at eye level.

Grouping of pictures is a new decorating practice and a series of small prints may be arranged to outline an object, turn a corner behind a furniture grouping or dramatize a setting.

6 Homes on Evarts St.

City Construction Co. will build six homes at 312-32 Evarts st. ne., according to a building permit application. The residences will be two story and basement, of brick, semidetached.

Army Veteran Moves Into New "Wheelchair" House

ALBERT M. RAYMOND, 32, former Army Quartermaster Corps officer, is the first paralyzed veteran to receive a Government grant for a "wheelchair house" in the District of Columbia.

Raymond, severly crippled by poliomyelitis in Italy four years ago, recently moved into his specially-designed $17,000 brick home at 1516 Girard st. ne.

Two other Washington area veterans have received housing grants authorized by Public Law 702 for homes in nearby Maryland.

The legislation authorized VA to pay a grant of 50 percent, up to $10,000, of the cost of special housing for veterans paralyzed from the waist down by a spinal cord injury or disease incurred in service.

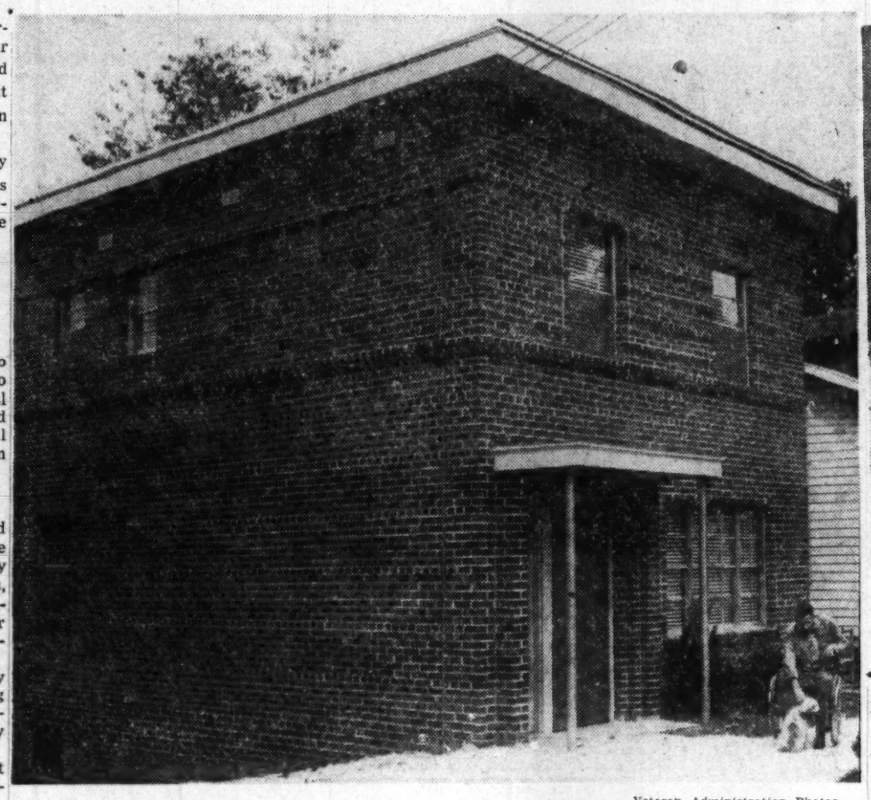
Six Rooms, Two-Story

THE LAW has been liberalized recently to extend the same benefit to veterans whose disability requires the aid of braces, crutches, canes or a wheelchair. The disability may be the result of either war or peacetime service subsequent to April 21, 1948.

The grant may be used to buy a new home, remodel an existing home or to liquidate the indebtedness on a special home already acquired.

Raymond applied for his grant and assistance in building a wheelchair house last January. VA doctors first determined if he could live at home and if he was eligible for the grant. He was then contacted by Gordon O. Johnson, construction analyst for VA's Washington region office. Johnson found that the veteran already had purchased a lot at the Girard st. location.

Discussion with Raymond and examination of VA's sample plans helped Johnson to determine the kind of house Raymond wanted. He decided on a six-room two-story rampless house. Raymond would occupy the first floor and his parents would live upstairs.



Albert M. Raymond, paralyzed former Army Quartermaster Corps officer sits before his new "wheelchair home" at 1516 Girard st. ne., the first such house built in the District

Veteran Administration Photos

Unlike most paraplegic veterans, Raymond specified that no ramps be included in the house—for two good reasons. In addition to paralyzing his legs, the polio attack left Raymond's left arm too weak to permit safe handling of his wheelchair on ramps. While hospitalized two years ago, he lost control of his chair on a ramp and the chair tipped over on him. Also, Raymond felt the house would have a greater future resale value if there were no ramps.

Raymond had frequent conferences with Gordon O. Johnson, VA construction analyst. House was acquired with aid of a Government grant

4 Months to Build

AFTER Johnson had determined what special features Raymond wished incorporated in the house, VA had plans and specifications drawn. The next step was to locate a lender who would make the loan for the remaining half of the purchase price. Morgan B. Callahan, loan guaranty officer for the VA regional office, found the First Federal Savings and Loan Association receptive. Callahan then contacted several builders for bids on the house, and contract was awarded to Edwin B. Feldman.

Construction was started May 15 and the house was completed September 25, 1949. The big day arrived a few weeks ago. Raymond wheeled into his bright new home, accompanied by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Albert L. Raymond.

Life in a specially designed home is made pleasanter for Raymond by a low mirror and basin that allows the veteran to shave and wash from a wheelchair

Raymond's bedroom is on the ground floor, with adjoining special bathroom and huge roll-in closet. The bath is equipped with a special shower stall that permits the veteran to wheel his chair into position. The shower has four strategically aimed sprays. The wash basin is slightly lower than usual and the mirror above it has been lowered so that the veteran may shave while seated in his wheelchair.

All doorways are wide and without sills. Sliding doors, with hand grips set at the proper level for Raymond, are installed throughout the first floor. Raymond's bedroom is also his office. He has the telephone there and plans to put a work desk in the room.

Much of the veteran's time is occupied with the duties of parish secretary for the Calvary Episcopal Church, keeping financial records, recording vital statistics, etc. He plans to take other work which he can handle at home.

The "gun" in a television tube shoots no bullets, but rather "fires" a stream of electrons upon a self-contained screen.

Television Sets Create Problem Of Arrangement

Television, which is changing some living habits of many Americans, is also changing the appearance of the homes they live in.

Some homeowners have installed television without interior decoration upheavals. Others have built whole new rooms around the receiver. All have been confronted by the big initial problem—where to put the set.

In many homes, conversion of the basement or part of it into a recreation-television room provides the answer. This permits the living room to function without the dimmed lights and "shushings" brought on by television.

The sunroom is a convenient spot for television. This type of room is well suited to the less expensive small screen sets that might not be adequate for the larger living room. Pull drapes adapt the room to daytime television.

A few home owners, lacking a recreation room or sunroom and preferring to free the living room for other family activities, have placed the set in the dining room. If it's in the living room, basic consideration is visibility from major seating units. Folding chairs are useful for small living rooms where permanent extra chairs take too much space.

Colors Can Alter Room's Proportions

The uninteresting proportions of a square room can be minimized by treating the window-wall with a different color or color value than the other three walls, installing a floor that affords sharp color contrast, and giving the ceiling a still different color.

The square room will appear longer with pastel yellow on the rear and side walls, pale blue on the window-wall, dark red marbleized asphalt tile floor and ivory ceiling. If the ceiling is high, make it lower by giving it a darker color than the walls. Bands of wall color, decreasing from dark to light tones in two-foot sweeps as they rise toward the ceiling will make small rooms seem larger. This effect is heightened if the ceiling is given a cream or ivory tint and the floor treated in dark green, blue, brown or red.

Eig Donation

3 Religious Groups Get Free Land

SAM EIG, wealthy Jewish liquor and real estate promoter, believes in practicing what he preaches: that men of all faith can live and worship happily together.

EIG

To further this goal he has donated valuable land adjacent to his prosperous Rock Creek Gardens apartment center on East-West Highway, for three churches—Protestant, Catholic and Jewish.

The churches will serve the 500 apartments' families, plus an estimated 500 families in homes in nearby subdivisions of Meadowbrook, Rock Creek Forest, Rosemary Hills and others.

The land, comprising up to 60 building lots where land is cheap at $2000 per lot, was turned over "without strings attached" to the church groups. Churches will be approximately 2 blocks apart.

The Rev. William Firth, minister of St. Paul's Methodist Church just completed, said crowds of worshipers had to be turned away on opening Sunday. The 200 seating capacity has been filled in succeeding Sundays.

A Jewish Community Center will rise on land adjacent to Rock Creek Park. It will boast 15 classrooms, gym and auditorium, with building funds subscribed by members of all faiths. The Center will be used as a Sunday School for Jewish children on Sundays, with full week-day use by all faiths.

A Catholic Church and school will be erected at the entrance to the apartment project, with Eig presently working out all details with Archbishop Patrick A. O'Boyle.

Industries Spoil Streams

U. S. Cities Threatened With Shut-Off of Water

By Claire Cox

NEW YORK, Nov. 12 (U.P.).—Man is threatening to dry up many of the Nation's cities, the conservationist, Fairfield Osborn, warned today.

Water shortages are plaguing communities from New York to some of the smallest Western towns, he said. Los Angeles has a water problem. So do Peoria, Phoenix, El Paso, Milwaukee and Chicago, he said.

Osborn, president of the National Conservation Foundation, said there is hardly a State which does not have some water problem. Wells are running dry in Arizona. New England industries are polluting streams and spoiling them for further use. Watersheds—trees and other growths—have been removed from the Midwest and Pacific Northwest. Peoria and other cities with only enough water for present inhabitants cannot expand their industries or populations without new sources of water.

The Conservation Foundation, a private organization, is making a survey of the Nation's water supply at the request of the Interior and Agriculture Departments and the Army Engineers. Osborn expects it to be completed next year, but preliminary findings have given him a rough idea of the general situation—and he doesn't like it.

He put the blame largely on man, rather than nature. Wastefulness, short-sightedness and selfishness are the main causes for the shortages of water.

In the last 36 years, Osborn said, the Nation's forests have been reduced by approximately 40 percent and the water which was under them is gone. Much of the Midwestern grass watershed was removed during the war to make way for more profitable wheat. A lot of water is wasted in floods, which could be prevented with watersheds, reservoirs and dams, Osborn said. But many dams, on the other hand, have been built in locations where they are filling up with dirt, he said.

With decreased water supplies, usage has increased. The Nation uses an average of 200 gallons of water per day per person, including industrial consumption, and the population is increasing at the rate of about a million a year, Osborn said.

For personal uses, about 50 gallons of water a day flows through faucets, he said. This goes for bathing, drinking, cooking and other domestic purposes. Millions of additional gallons of water flow into the sea without having been touched by man.

An air-conditioning machine uses about 300 gallons of water a day. It takes 10 gallons of water to make a gallon of gasoline; 5 gallons for a gallon of milk; 33 gallons for a pound of steel; 100 gallons for a gallon of alcohol, and 300 gallons for 1 pound of synthetic rubber.

Osborn believes industries should have to purify water before returning it to streams, so that it can be used again. In Chicago, Milwaukee and Peoria, where some industries must have ice-cold well water, which is running out, water could be pumped from Lake Michigan into the wells, thus giving a never-ending supply.

Home users could be more thoughtful, too, Osborn said. Dripping faucets should be repaired, he said. Most taps don't need to run as long as they do, and the tub doesn't need to be nearly so full for Saturday night baths.

Firemen's Associtaion Elects New Officers

New officers in the Firemen's Association, Local No. 36, were elected at a meeting held Wednesday night.

President is Lieut. Alvin E. Davis of Engine Co. No. 6; first vice president, Pvt. E. R. Curtis of Truck Co. No. 11; second vice president, Lieut. N. O. Teates of Engine Co. No. 16; treasurer, Sergt. H. O. Wheeler of Engine Co. No. 17 and sergeant-at-arms, Pvt. G. W. Rock of Engine Co. No. 12.

Hardwood Floors Easily Kept Bright

Hardwood floors can be kept clean and sparkling almost indefinitely with a moderate amount of simple care.

One of the basic points of good maintenance, according to homemaking experts, is daily sweeping with an untreated dust mop.

This takes up dirt and dust that might be ground into the finish, dimming its luster.

An occasional polishing with a soft cloth, a weighted floor brush or an electric polisher maintains the brilliant sheen.

It is advisable to clean and wax the floors several times a year—the frequency depending upon the amount of wear they receive.

Cleaning preferably should be done with a wax base preparation made especially for hardwood floors.

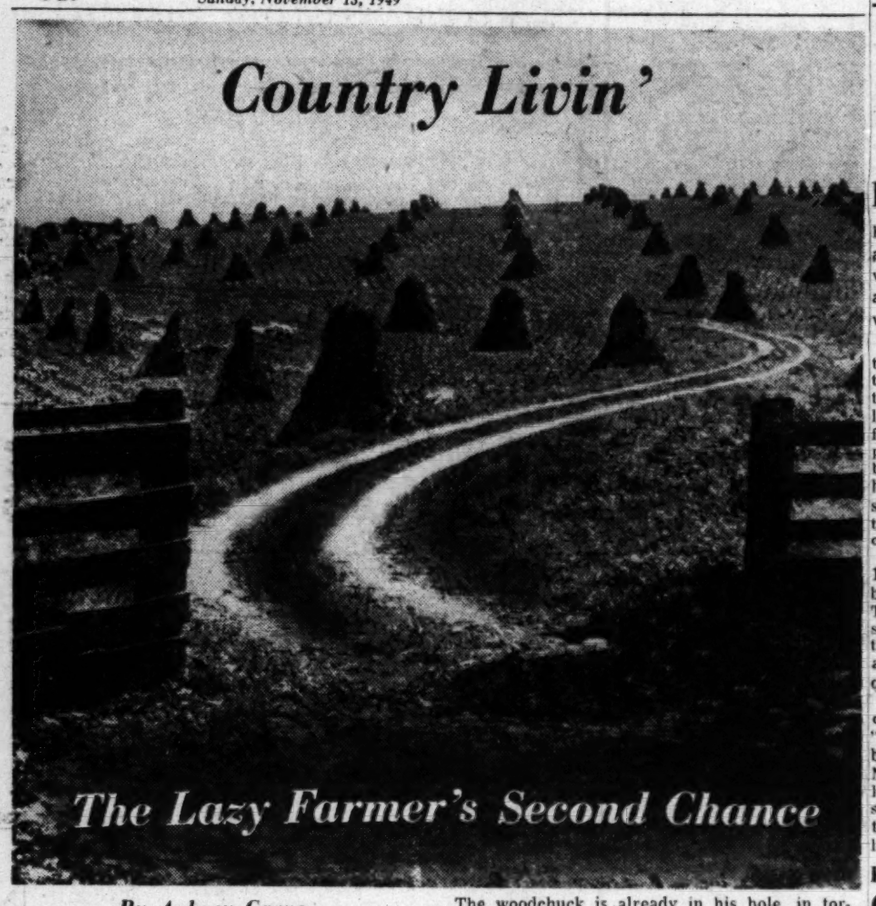
Country Livin'



The Lazy Farmer's Second Chance

By Aubrey Graves

Tears, idle tears, I know not what they mean
Tears from the depth of some divine despair
Rise in the heart, and gather to the eyes,
In looking on the happy autumn fields,
And thinking of the days that are no more.

THIS, from Alfred, Lord Tennyson, is full of the mood of Indian summer. There is a balm about this glorious in-between time. But there is also something wistful, an indefinable melancholy and a yearning for the past that seizes the soul even as it raptures in the fleeting season's quickly fading beauty.

Nature seems to be pausing at the threshold, reluctant to say a final good-by to summer, yet bracing herself against the javelins of sleet and rain to come.

From the oak, the poplar and the maple, the technicolor raiment has all but fallen. At sunset a blue autumnal haze rises like smoke from the council fires of long departed braves. Day's end comes suddenly and the nights grow longer and sharper.

Like a jack-o-lantern, the moon hangs full in the jeweled vastness of the sky. "Lazy-farmer-moon," the Indians used to call this period, a concession from the Great Spirit, to give the laggard a second chance, a last time to gather in the harvest, in the few warm suns of mid-November.

TO THE LAND of the south wind the robins and wrens have departed. Snakes, toads and spiders have chosen snug harbors under stones, logs and leaves, there to lie inert until the warmth of April comes again.

Fat from October gorging, the dormouse is underground in his grass-lined boudoir, in a deep winter trance. The chipmunk stirs in his intermittent sleep, to nibble on seeds and nuts providently taken to bed.

The woodchuck is already in his hole, in torpid slumber. Not until February will he emerge and then not to look for his shadow, as you were told in nursery days, but to find himself a mate. Even the skunk, among the last to retire of all creatures that hibernate, has burrowed in, sleeping fitfully and ambling topside for eleventh-hour meals on warm, sunny days.

And just how can one know when it's Indian Summer? Many are the answers, and varied. Some say it starts, inevitably, on November 11. Others place the time definitely around the full moon in November, after the first hard frost. The Old Farmer's Almanac arrives dogmatically at November 22. The poet brushes aside all such exactitude and calls the sentimental season a state of mind.

IT WAS A long time ago, according to Chippewa gospel, and the time was early November. The ripened corn, for the most part, had been gathered and most of the animals had garnered their winter stores. Nature was about to close her eyes for the long winter moons, soon at hand.

Then, suddenly, came the gusts of cold winter wind around the hogan and the wigwam and the early morning sunrise glistened on the frosty meadow grasses.

The Great Bear finally opened his mouth, high in the heavens, and the first flakes of snow descended, putting the tired land to rest. Through the veins of the lazy man came the awakening shivers. "Squaw Winter" was the red man's name for it.

Desperately, the tardy tribespeople appealed for another chance, a little more time in which to gather in the maize. The Great Spirit was a Kindly Spirit and that is how the Indians, and those who came after, were bequeathed this brief but rich reprieve, this precious prelude to winter.

Set Crowns Out Early

Bulldozer Unnecessary In Planting Asparagus

By Alfred Putz

DESIGNATING one vegetable as the most important for the home garden is bound to lead to arguments over preferences. Many will pick tomatoes, but those who also grow asparagus are likely to vote for the latter.

Yet this is the time not only to think about the asparagus bed, but to do something about it. With the soil in perfect condition for a longer period than could be hoped for in the spring, it should be fully prepared now so that the roots can be set out just as soon as the soil has lost its stickiness in early spring. Planted at the first opportunity in spring, every crown will come up and make a good plant.

All experts agree that strong 1-year-old crowns are by far the best. The emphasis is on the strong. There is a wide difference in the size and vigor of the plants from the same seedbed. Some are almost as large as 2-year-olds and frequently are sold as such.

One-year-old No. 1 crowns according to the latest editions of "Horticultural Standards" issued by the American Association of Nurserymen, Inc., "shall not weigh less than 60 pounds per thousand. Fifty percent of the root system shall exceed 5 inches in length."

Buy More Than Needed

CONSIDERING the low price of the crowns and the long life expected of them, it pays to purchase twice as many as needed and select the best ones for planting. Examine each crown and select the most vigorous and those having the most eyes.

Opinions differ as to the best way of planting, but most commercial growers have gotten away from deep planting as advocated years ago. That, however, does not mean that deep soil preparation is not essential to success. The deeper the soil is prepared the better the crops and the longer the life of the planting. A bed certainly should yield bumper crops for 10 years, and twice that long if properly cared for year after year.

The depth to which to prepare the soil depends on the kind you have. If it is heavy it can not and should not be as deep as in sandy loam, and if you have a stone strata beneath, it will have to be even less. That should not dismay you because you still can grow excellent asparagus under such conditions by planting the crowns as shallow as 2 inches below the surface. Most commercial plantings are made at that depth.

If your soil is deep, placing the crowns from 5 to 8 inches deep is preferred in the home garden, but you will have to go down, at least another 6 inches so that you can place a heavy layer of well rotted manure in the bottom of the trench.

Without manure your results will not be what you have a right to expect even if you use commercial fertilizer at the recommended quantities, lime and an extra application of superphosphate. The latter two must be well mixed with the soil below the roots to perform the work assigned to them.

BOTH are especially important in our region because our soils are too acid for the best growth of asparagus and are very short on phosphorus. Pulverized limestone is preferred to hydrated lime. It has no caustic action and its effects are more prolonged.

Twenty pounds of limestone and 3 pounds of superphosphate are average applications for every 100 square feet of bed and they must be thoroughly incorporated into the soil to the full depth of the trench. You need not be concerned with other fertilizers at planting time as they are best given as surface applications or better still in liquid form when the plants are established.

Figure on not less than 25 feet of row per person with the rows spaced 4 feet apart and the plants set a foot apart in the rows. With the bed fully prepared this fall all you have to do is open up the rows to the required planting depth in early spring after the soil has lost its stickiness. If you had to wait in spring until it could be prepared to its proper depth you would surely miss the best time for planting, besides having difficulty to find enough time to make a really good job of it.

Alta Vista Terrace To Have 10 New Homes

Ten brick bungalows will be erected in Alta Vista Terrace, Bethesda, Md., by Humphrey & Quigg, contractors, for Cambridge Homes, Inc., owners. Units will rise in the 5900 and 6000 blocks of Conway st., and the 9100 block of Ewing st. J. M. Spence is the architect.

Along with other early radio developments, Guglielmo Marconi is credited with being the first to use an elevated wire as a wireless antenna.

Set Out Pansies and Lilies Now

By Katherine Barrett Pozer

WITH AN eye on the calendar and the thermometer we can still plan to set out some more things and do some more chores which will help out when spring arrives. Pansies, for instance. The habit of planting fall pansies is a good one. It gets one of the spring jobs out of the way and many times results in a much longer and more satisfactory season to bloom. The plants are much cheaper at this time and one can purchase several dozen for the price of a few spring plants in flower.

Plants purchased now will soon settle down and make themselves at home and start making root growth and be ready to bloom when the first warm spring sun hits them. Blooming plants bought in the spring often have been pampered and forced. They will then resent ordinary garden conditions and produce few additional blooms.

Pansies do not need coddling as far as cold is concerned. It is the heat of our summers that does them harm. It is well to give them a light mulch of leaves tucked under their foliage but not over it. This is to prevent their heaving out of the ground in successive frosts and freezes.

It is a good idea after midwinter thaws to check over the plants and if the roots show above ground, push them back and cover again with soil. In early spring they should be given a few pinches of such fertilizers as sheep manure. To carry pansies through the summer is an achievement, but many times they will survive the heat if they are kept pinched back and given a top dressing of new soil.

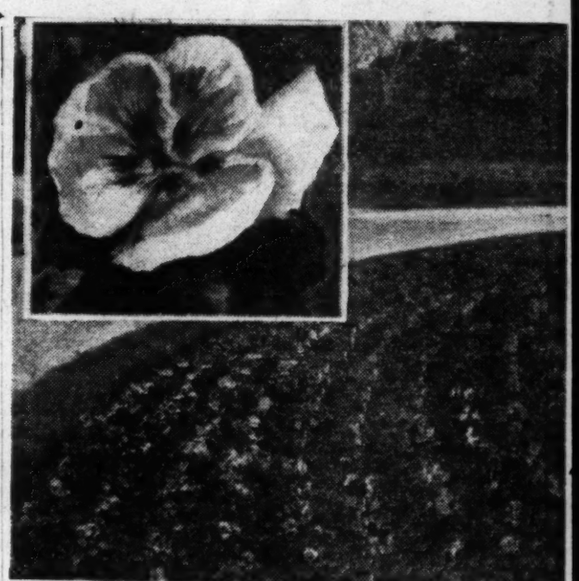
Plant Lilies Until Freeze

THE interest in lily growing continues and they too can still be planted until the ground freezes. A recent copy of the Saturday Evening Post contained a most interesting article with fine-colored photography. It was entitled "See What They're Doing To Lilies." It describes in detail the work of Jan De Groff in his gardens in Oregon. Mr. De Groff brought many of these lilies to the Lily Show in Fairfax in the early summer, so that many of the local lily enthusiasts had the opportunity of seeing at first hand the new lilies, some of which are described in this article. Doubtless many of these lilies will appear in next year's shows.

For the newer gardener it is well to be reminded that the Regal is the best starter and no lily is lovelier. The new hybrids give variety in coloring and form but they still retain the hardy qualities which made them the forerunner of the present lily interest.

Lilies by Courtesy

BESIDES the lilies there are many "lilies by courtesy," not the true-scale lily but others with lily-like blossoms such as the "day lily" and the "spider lily." The latter has long been a favorite in Southern gardens and recently has appeared at many of the nearby shows where it has been a lovely addition to flower arrangements. Deep red in color, it blooms with the other brilliant fall flowers and combines beautifully with them. Its foliage comes up after blooming and makes a winter ornament. If it likes the spot where it is planted it will increase rapidly and have a profusion of blooms whether planted in sun or shade.



But occasionally it is tempermental and if it doesn't bloom there is nothing that can be done.

Since the "Spider Lily" foliage appears after its blooms it should be planted in the spring. We are mentioning it now because it caused much comment at some of the recent shows and many visitors asked its identity.

A near cousin of the "Spider Lily" or lycoris radiata is the lycoris squamigera which has a cluster of pink trumpet blooms in August. Unlike its cousin it puts up its foliage in the spring. This dies down and the lily stalks shoot up with no foliage of their own. For this reason they were often called "Naked Ladies" in Old-World gardens. They are a beautiful addition in any garden and will grow in either deep shade or a partially shaded spot. To get the best effect they should be planted along with some other foliage-bearing plant like "Baby's Breath." The bulbs can go in the ground now, and should be marked when the strap-like foliage begins to die down in spring.

Dealers will soon be shipping the "Christmas Rose" and the aconite. Both these should be planted as soon as received. Plant them near the house where they can be enjoyed when the weather prevents garden visits.

HOW TO GROW:
African Violets

THIS lovely flowering plant with velvety leaves and blooms of shaded purple and blue is one of our most popular house plants. Prime of bloom is from October through January with a second flowering period in early spring.

East and north windows are preferred for growing African violets. They do not need direct sunlight, which means they can be set away from the window. They should be guarded from bright artificial light at night. Plants should be turned regularly to keep them growing straight. Guard against excessive heat and drafts. Temperature should not be allowed to get below 60 degrees at night and not higher than 80 during the day.

African violets should be watered from below. They must have a constant supply of water. It is often necessary to water twice a day if the room temperature gets too high and the air to dry. An excellent way to keep the surrounding air moist enough is to set the pot in another that is larger and contains damp peat moss.

Then all that's necessary between waterings is to keep the peat moss damp, providing for the constant evaporation of moisture in the air. If excessive moisture remains on the leaves overnight or for any length of time the leaves will rot. However, the plant will benefit from an occasional washing (light sprinkle or spray), but the excessive water must be shaken off and plant allowed to dry away from the light. Use lukewarm water in washing foliage.

FEEDING

AFRICAN violets should be fed once a month. An excellent way to feed is to put ½ teaspoon of plant food in a quart of lukewarm water and use in watering the plants. Since all of the plant food will not readily go into solution shake or stir before watering each plant. Plant food in tablet form is used very successfully by many growers.

PROPAGATION

THE PLANT is easily propagated from leaf cuttings, made in March, with a full length of the stem on each leaf. Cut at the base of the stem with a sharp blade and insert stem in water or moist sand to a depth of ½ inch. Old plants will last several years if they are divided in the fall before flowering. Knock out the root clump and cut into sections with a sharp knife. The small new plants or off-sets will bloom successfully.

Model Home Project Guided by 12 Rules

(More stories and pictures about the Revere exhibition in Section B)

THE REVERE Quality House Institute, a nationally known housing group affiliated with Southwest Research Institute, of San Antonio, Texas, has put its seal of approval on two model homes here, one in Virginia, one in Maryland.

Residences are: a $17,500 three level house in Hollin Hills, south of Alexandria on Fort Hunt rd., built by Hollin Hills, Inc., and a $14,950 "California modern" erected by Carl M. Freeman, Inc., at 5914 Anniston rd., Alta Vista Terrace, Bethesda, Md.

Both homes are now open for public inspection, sponsored by local civic organizations. An admission fee of 25 cents for adults will be spent for underprivileged children and playground equipment for schools.

Here are the basic principles which governed the selection of the two homes by the Revere organization:

GOOD SITE PLANNING. Design streets to discourage through traffic. Design homes and place them on plots to take advantage of natural features of site and provide privacy for outdoor living.

EFFICIENT USE of space. Reduce corridors and halls to a minimum; install compact mechanical equippment. Plan most rooms for more than one use, so there will be no rooms used only an hour or two a day.

PLAN FOR HEALTH. Make sure all rooms have plenty of natural light, air and sunlight and that artificial light and heat are available when needed. Design to reduce home accidents. Home should be warm in winter, cool in summer.

PLAN FOR CONVENIENCE. Reduce housework and footsteps to a minimum. Use durable, easy to clean materials. Provide adequate storage space for family's possessions.

PLAN FOR LIVABILITY. Provide for all of the frequently conflicting activities of family life—a place for listening to the radio and a quiet place for reading or studying, indoor and outdoor play space, space for home repair shop.

PLAN FOR PRIVACY. Windows should not open opposite neighbor's windows. Outdoor living space should be screened from neighbors' by planting or fences. Provide access to bathroom from bedrooms without going through living room.

OUTDOOR LIVING. Provide place near kitchen for eating, shady places for reading, open space for sun bath.

YEAR-AROUND COMFORT. Open large glass areas on side of home having best view, reduce openings on undesirable view. Use overhangs, trellises or planting to supplement orientation.

PLAN FOR FUTURE: Since families grow and change, provide for changing internal arrangements to fit changed family needs. Piping and wiring should be adequate for increased future use.

QUALITY MATERIALS. Select durable materials which do their job well, require minimum maintenance, and look well.

QUALITY CONSTRUCTION. Begin with well-drained site and foundations on solid bearing. Use sound engineering with shrinkage minimized and equalized. House must be water-tight and windproof. Obtain skillful, honest workmanship.

QUALITY EQUIPMENT. Mechanical equipment should have capacity for greater future use, be durable, dependable and nonhazardous.

Living room of the Alta Vista Terrace Revere house is enhanced by draperies which cover the entire window wall at the rear. Draperies are from the House of Fabrics and are in a line design of gray, lime and lipstick. When drawn back, drapes reveal a 100 square foot of window area which gives the illusion of bringing the outdoors inside

Homes Opened Over Nation

Revere Quality House exhibitions, like those opening here today, are national in scope. Similar houses of modern, contemporary architecture, selling at under $20,000 were built during 1948 in the following cities: Houston, Sarasota, Fla.; Springfield, N. J.; Boston, Cleveland, South Bend, Ind., and Seattle.

The 1949 program so far has seen houses exhibited at San Francisco, Detroit, Syracuse, and Salt Lake City. Scheduled for the rest of 1949, besides the two here, are houses in Kansas City, Mo., Pittsburgh and Dallas.

Exhibitions already set for next year will be at Cincinnati, Philadelphia, Denver, Buffalo, San Antonio and Rochester.

Closet-Cabinets Provide Needed Space in Homes

The problem of storage space is probably one of the American householders No. 1 headaches. And even for those who have plenty of it, rarely is it as usable as they'd like it to be.

The slickest solution yet devised to provide accessible space without destroying appearance is the storage wall. Both Revere model homes use the same type of ready-made closet-cabinet, distributed here by Milo Products Co.

The storage walls provide maximum of storage in minimum of space. Extending from floor to ceiling, they also boast sliding doors on metal tracks, eliminating the old-fashioned pull-out type door. Separate cabinets occupy the space between the wardrobe portion of the closet and the ceiling.

Since 1916 the number of miles of railway line in continental United States has declined steadily from 254,037 to 225,200.

Two New Area Houses Feature All-Copper Weatherproofing

ONE of the hidden qualities in the two new houses built and opened in metropolitan Washington under the auspices of the Revere Quality House Division of the Southwest Research Institute is the fact that they are completely weather-proofed by copper flashing.

The houses were built to such institute standards as proper orientation, site planning, first-class construction materials and skilled workmanship. One house, in Bethesda, has an expansion living-dining area. The other, in Hollin Hills, Alexandria, is on three levels and has three bedrooms.

Flashing seals roof joints and outside walls of a house against leaks. Sheets of weatherproof material, called flashing, are used.

Points where flashing is needed include valleys where two roof surfaces come together, the joints between roof and chimney, the wall joints at the top of entrance doors and windows, and the place where a porch joins the wall of the house.

Because it is impractical to fit these joints so closely together that they will exclude the weather, and because a house may settle slightly on the foundation, as well as expand and contract slightly with the changes in outside temperatures, flashing seals the house against leaks which would cause damage and deterioration.

Copper was used in the flashing of the Revere Quality House because it cannot rust or rot, and therefore need never be replaced or painted, and being easily cut and bent to shape, it is readily installed.

Copper Drains Featured at Hollin Hills

ONE of the quality features included in the three-level, three-bedroom house at Hollin Hills, Alexandria, built by Hollin Hills, Inc., in conjunction with the Revere Quality House Division, Southwest Research Institute, is the inclusion of a copper drainage system for the roof.

In the course of one year up to 5000 gallons, about 20 tons, of water fall on the average roof, which if not fully protected by a nonrusting material can cause considerable damage in a short period of time. Failure to install gutters and leaders often results in extensive damage to the walls and grounds adjacent to the house from the excessive flow of water off the roof.

Copper, which is rustfree, strong and durable, helps provide protection from deterioration caused by water. In the form of gutters and downspouts, rustfree copper bears the brunt of the burden put on a roof by falling water. The water runs off the roof, is caught in the gutter and rushes down the downspouts. When properly installed, it has been found by the Revere Quality House Division, copper drainage systems stand up for decades under the worst conditions.

Normally, the labor costs for installing copper gutters and downspouts is substantially the same as that for other materials although there is a moderate difference in the cost of the materials themselves. However, in the long run, the nonrusting copper is by far the most economical. Rustable material generally needs replacement within five or more years of installation. It often needs repainting and thus maintenance costs, with materials other than copper, overshadow the savings made in the original purchase of these materials.

Radiant Heating Helpful In Furniture Arranging

Visitors to the Revere Quality Home built by Carl M. Freeman, Inc., in Alta Vista Terrace, Bethesda, can see how the radiant heating installation simplifies arrangement of furniture by its lack of radiators and grills.

The Freeman firm has been using radiant heating in all homes built since 1946 and was one of the first to use the new heating method in a large subdivision—Carole Highlands, off New Hampshire ave. extended.

Radiant heating, said Freeman, is best described as circulating hot water through copper tubing buried in the insulated concrete slab, thereby warming the concrete. The latter in turn generates warmth, heating the surface of the walls, ceilings, furniture and drapes to a temperature not exceeding 80 degrees. The air in turn becomes heated by contact with the warm surfaces, which brings greater body comfort.

The advantage listed for the radiant heating system, besides the greater floor space, is cleanliness. It is also possible to install radiant heating in sidewalks and driveways to melt the snow and ice in winter.

Freeman is using a revolutionary type of radiant heating in his new Hampshire Hills subdivision, off New Hampshire ave. extended, where a large group of $10,250 homes is under way. Homes are heated by hot air blown through air passages formed by laying cinder blocks end to end, then covering the cinder block "floor" with a layer of concrete. Thus, the hot air travels through the cinder blocks, warming them and the concrete, which warms the house and its occupants.

Budget Announced By Alexandria Church

A budget of $24,803 for 1950 has been adopted by the Episcopal Church of St. Clement, Alexandria.

New vestrymen are Frederick A. Adams, John E. Anderson, jr., John E. Burleson, Robert J. Burns, Moreau V. Chambers, Col. Lawrence L. Clayton, Richmond T. Frothingham, Maj. J. D. T. Hamilton, Roger F. Lipps, Edgar H. Parsons, Capt. Thomas J. Sabiston, Embry G. Scott, George W. Snyder, Werner C. Strecker, Col. Harry E. Trail and Frederick Erhard. Strecker was named senior warden, Burleson junior warden, and Major Hamilton register.

Polio Indemnity

Spokane (U.P.).—Polio insurance—costing $10 a year per family—is enjoying a brisk sale in the Spokane area, insurance men reported. Agents said the policy provides a $5000 benefit to each member of a family of 10 who is under 21 years of age and a dependent.

TRADE-WIND KITCHEN VENTILATOR KEEPS THE HOLLIN HILLS HOUSE FREE FROM GREASE AND ODORS

YOUR KITCHEN, TOO, WILL ALWAYS STAY FRESH AND CLEAN BY INSTALLING AN INEXPENSIVE TRADE-WIND CLIPPER.
Hidden in the ceiling above your stove and vented outdoors, this Trade-Wind Clipper traps all greasy cooking smoke and odors and instantly expels them before they can drift through your home. Almost like magic your kitchen stays fresh and cool and odor-free, even when frying or roasting.
Demand Scientific Kitchen Ventilation
Kitchen ventilation can be so effective if you demand these 3 all-important requirements which Trade-Wind alone can give you —
1. Ventilation at ceiling level expels all the unwanted air. A unit installed in a wall, for example, will not draw down the bad air trapped at the ceiling.
2. Power blower discharge, unlike blade-type fans, forces out the air under pressure. This is the recognized type of blower used in air conditioning systems, forced air furnaces and industrial applications.
3. And only Trade-Wind's patented design locates the motor entirely outside the greasy air stream. Because the motor stays clean, every Trade-Wind Clipper is guaranteed for 5 years.

HAROLD A. KEMP, District director of sanitary engineering, will be the main speaker at the November luncheon of the Washington Building Congress at the Mayflower Hotel on Monday. He will discuss stream pollution in the metropolitan Washington area.

Kemp will discuss three types of stream pollution: sanitary sewage, industrial wastes and soil erosion. Removing Potomac mud from the area water supply is a chief purpose of local filtration plants.

The speaker was recently appointed chairman of the Interstate Commission on the Potomac River Basin created in 1941 to consider water resources of the Potomac Basin. P. Y. K. Howat, congress president, will preside at the meeting.

The Building Owners and Managers Association of Metropolitan Washington will hold its seventeenth anniversary party at 12:30 p. m. Wednesday at the Ambassador Hotel, president James E. Douglass has announced.

A. Julian Brylawski is in charge of entertainment. Marshall Davis, regional vice president, will describe plans for the Middle Atlantic Conference January 15-17, at Seaview Country Club, Absecon, N. J.

More than 1000 city, State and Federal housing officials are expected to attend the sixteenth annual meeting of the National Association of Housing Officials in Boston, November 13-16. Housing for moderate-income families under State-aided programs is one top subject up for discussion. Nationally known housing and redevelopment experts, architects and planners will address the conference, with delegates holding 28 panel sessions to discuss a wide variety of subjects.

More than 4000 realtors, including around 50 from the local area, will attend the meeting. Prominent speakers scheduled to address the convention include Harold E. Stassen, Senator Kenneth S. The National Institute of Real Estate Brokers has added these local members to its membership of 8037: Frank L. Hewitt and Charles P. Wood, Silver Spring, Md.

Washington Home Builders Association has opened its fall membership drive. Now the fourth largest local chapter in the National Association of Home Builders, the local group, with 435 members, is aiming at the 535 mark. Only Los Angeles, Chicago and Seattle are bigger.

You can change a truck into a station wagon with the Dixie tallyho station wagon body made by the Dixie Tallyho Co. of Fairburn, Ga. The company says the body can be placed on a half-ton truck by one man in one minute. It is designed for use by farmers, contractors, hotels and utility companies.

The Bircher Co. of Rochester, N. Y., for many years has made letter openers, but now they have a new lightning letter opener designed for bulky mail like bank statements and other hard to handle envelopes. Using two sharp wheels, it cuts a hair-thin strip from any edge of the envelope. It is electric powered, has automatic adjustments, and the thinness of the cut can be adjusted from zero upward.

Index cards that automatically fan out for visibility are made by the Koller & Smith Co. of New York. The secret is magnetism in the cards that causes the tops of the cards to repell each other and remain apart at a uniform distance to permit inspection. They won't stick together. Otherwise, the system works just like any other card index file.

You Can't Say That About the Moom Pitchas!

By Richard L. Coe

TALKING ABOUT THE MOVIES with visitors from Hollywood always leaves me feeling as frustrated as I'm sure it leaves them.

This week, for instance, has brought bull sessions with such folk as Dore Schary, production chief of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, largest studio in the world; Eric Johnston, president of the Motion Picture Association; George Murphy, a Yale man who worked himself from hoofer to the presidency of the Screen Actors' Guild; Peter Lawford, a young man of vast popularity; John Hodiak, an actor married to an actress, Anne Baxter, and Craig Stevens, another actor married to an actress, Alexis Smith.

All of these gentlemen have been roundly successful in their work, but they all were unanimously on the defensive about their movie world. They seemed to feel that people are always saying unkind things about them, as if, for instance, they had B. O.

Batting Average?

SCHARY, for instance, seemed to feel downright hurt that people criticize the movies. "After all," said he, "the batting average of the movies as compared with play production or book publishing is lots higher. Just think of all the junk that's published in book form and all the plays that are just plain awful.

"We in the movies have to make so many pictures a year to keep the theaters open. Naturally, some of those pictures are poor. I don't deny that. But we do turn out a high percentage of good ones and I can't understand why the public doesn't think of them when they talk about how lousy the movies are.

"We also are continually attacked for high divorce rates, drinking and scandal, whereas, it's a matter of statistics that Hollywood is, if anything, more moral than most other cities in the country. But let a movie name be involved with anything, no matter what, and it's front-page news all over the country.

"We work hard, harder really than the average citizen, but no matter what we do we're wrong."

Unhappy Conscience?

BY STARTING out on a conversational gambit which no one else had brought up, Schary seemed to me to indicate an unfortunate psychological hurt, even an unhappy conscience.

There's a great deal to be said, of course, for his unhappiness. People do get funny ideas about Hollywood, but in a sense some of that is Hollywood's natural fate. You simply can't be as prominent as the movie world is and not expect to be criticized for your minor defalcations.

But it seemed to me that the sore in Hollywood picture making goes deeper than this. It is the necessity that huge sums are used to create a film and huge audiences must be attracted, which Schary and his friends use as an excuse for the tastelessness which seems to me the root of the Hollywood sore.

"Why," they say, "take a picture like 'I Remember Mama.' That was a good picture, the critics liked it but enough people didn't go. It hasn't made money. You say that a good simple picture will please people, yet that one didn't."

What Price 'Mama'

IT THEN developed that "I Remember Mama" had cost three and a half million dollars to make and that for it to make a profit, its advertising and distribution costs demanded that over four million be taken in.

This, it seemed to me, is exactly the blind alley that makes talking about pictures difficult. For why in heaven's name should it cost such a sum to make "I Remember Mama?"

That boiled down to the purchase price of a hit play, in which the author and original producers must get a take, huge salaries must be paid the stars and incredible detail given to the settings.

Sauce for the Goose

IT'S ALL part of the big-money deal that is Hollywood. Too, conveniently forgotten is the fact that the money made on cheaper productions does pay the freight on the more satisfying, costlier films.

Then there's the impatient-making fact that when a big picture is sent out, it's sometimes sold to the public at upped-prices. "Why, then," I asked, "don't you have cheaper rates for cheaper pictures?"

The answer to this is an unhappy shrug and the remark that that's up to the exhibitors, who in turn deny this and toss the responsibility back to the studios.

It boils down, then, to the fact that movies are made to make money and to appeal to everybody at

New Plate Spinner Cases His Public

By Sonia Stein

WE TOOK a moonlight gallup the other night, Gene Klavan and I. Gallup is what I mean—Dr. Gallup Poll type gallup.

Klavan, WTOP's newest disk jockey, flanked on either side by WTOP press representatives and trailed by me and my flying pencil, was casing his prospective public.

Researching for his new program—a nightly "Capital Punishment" period from 12:30 to 2 a. m. which starts this week—Klavan wanted to find out who's up after curfew and what kind of music they'd like to hear.

Tell ya who's up. The cab drivers. After a quick freeze from one cab supervisor who said Klavan would "have to see the day man before you see the night man about seeing the men," he gathered some warm comment from the drivers who came up with a variety of comment ranging all the way from, "No bebop," to "No blank blank bebop."

Requests for sweet music came in different garbs. One man asked for "3 o'clock in the morning music." Another hack man specifically requested Guy Lombardo records and even spoke a kind word for those with the vocals by Carmen Lombardo!

The hillbilly issue was split like the Hatfields and the McCoys. With assurances ringing in his ears that "If you don't play hillbilly I'll turn you off" from half the drivers and "if you play one hillbilly tune I'll turn you off" from the other half, Klavan had the situation well in hand—like a hot potato.

He's a Comic

WHILE he's assaying the gold in the poll, let's assay Klavan.

A delightful mimic with a marked sense of the ridiculous, Klavan is primarily a comedian rather than a disk jockey. "I make a vicious stab at being funny and let the records—which give you the finest musical support in the world—take care of themselves," he says.

The Hans Christian Andersen of radio, this author of "Fairy Tales for Juvenile Delinquents," actually prepares short skits for between disks. Some of them are satires on radio. His "blow by blow description" of the Democrats versus the Republicans in the Senate in true sports announcer style, is a tickling sample. Breathlessly he recounts the details of "the Republicans trotting to their benches" while "the referee, Vice President Barkley" enters and the "Dixiecrats start filibustering and tie up the whole game."

A football game described in terms of an international crisis with strong Russian accents is another Klavan item. (Jack of all accents and master of double talk as well, Klavan gives even the commercials a shot of the international at times.)

Short Joke Man

HE DEALS in short jokes as well as skits. But mostly he deals in smart delivery. To say that Klavan describing a recording as an "oldie and yet a goodie" or "a peachy keen record" is a joke, might try your credulity. But like Henry Morgan (whom he resembles) he has a deft sense of humorous timing and speech nuances.

Like Morgan he can be very flip. "I have an inferiority complex: I think everybody is inferior to me," he cracks. But, as is the case with Morgan, he actually has scarcely enough ego to keep him afloat. (Klavan remembers vividly his father's reaction to the first funny script he ever wrote. Deadpan, from beginning to end, his father commented only, "There are two words misspelled.")

Curiously Klavan is being given this show on WTOP—the first regular show the station has ever run past 1:05 a. m—by John Hayes, the same man who let Morgan have his own show on WOR in New York before the war.

But Omits His Best Work

Music's World Honors Schonberg

By Paul Hume

ON SEPTEMBER 13, of this year, Arnold Schonberg was 75 years old.

The Austrian-born composer, now living in California, where he composes and teaches, is being remembered on numerous orchestral programs around the country.

But few of these tributes are of adequate scope to honor properly one of the greatest living musicians.

Schonberg is, to many musicians, and to most listeners, a problem. His early music is well known, both in performance and on records. "Verklarte Nacht," originally written for string sextet, was later scored for full string orchestra and is often heard. Eugene Ormandy included it in his opening concert in Washington this fall.

ARNOLD SCHONBERG

Romantic Work

IT IS AN excessively romantic work, written when its young composer was 25 and completely under the spell of Wagner's Tristan. Harmonically, and in its leaping melodies, it is a direct result of the second act of Tristan.

It presents no problems for audiences unless they grow restless under its reiterations. Nor does the next important work on the Schonberg list make trouble for today's auditors.

The Gurre-Lieder, or Songs of Gurre, was written over a 10-year period, beginning in 1901 and coming to completion in 1911. Again it derives its principal ingredients from Wagner. And again those who enjoy hearing Wagner or Strauss, for the orchestra is the same in both, find Gurre-Lieder highly attractive.

Seldom Heard

NO—THE problem of Schonberg, for professional and layman alike, lies in his later music. And it is this music which is conspicuously absent from programs purporting to honor the composer today.

Indeed, we can hardly discuss the later Schonberg for his mature music is so seldom heard. There is a famous and fascinating piano concerto, performed in recent years under Stokowski. Eugene Ormandy last season played the orchestral variations, though he did not include them in his Washington programs.

Pierrot Lunaire, the traditional work between Gurre-Lieder and the Schonberg of the twenties, came as near as Annapolis last year, when it was performed at St. John's College. But of the less than 20 published works of this genius, whose name is more closely connected with the much-discussed 12-tone scale than any other man's, it seems safe to guess that Washigton has heard fewer than five.

Washington need not feel left out, however, for few cities have heard more. Who and what, then, is this man who is so important to music today and yet so ignored by music's practitioners?

Gurre-Lieder

TODAY'S COLUMN is a brief discussion of the largest work of early Schonberg, the Gurre-Lieder. In a few weeks we shall

He's Pretty on TV

Waring Finds a Way Out of the Darkness

By John Crosby

BANDS were never spectacularly successful in radio, not since the '20s, anyway, and there are a great many plausible arguments why they should be even less successful in television. None of them appears to deter the broadcasters who are putting one band after another on TV in blithe disregard of what the Soviets would call historic determinism.

The weightiest aggregation to come to my attention has been Fred Waring and his Pennsylvanians who are now heard on C.B.S.-TV (WOIC) at 9 p. m. Sundays. Waring's television program started out very, very shakily last year but now, through trial and error, has largely groped its way out of the darkness. With a few notable exceptions, it is a very pleasant picturization of the Waring radio program. That is, it is tuneful, distinctive and very pretty to look at.

Mountain Music

WARING has always had a passion for folk music, not only our own but that of every other nation; his special gift has been the ability to make folk music comprehensible and, more importantly, palatable to people whose normal tastes run toward such ballads as "Baby, It's Cold Outside." On the radio, he did this by means of the handsome vocalizing of his glee club plus some tricky orchestral arrangements. On television, you still hear the glee club and the orchestra but Waring is likely to add a folk dance in costume to look at.

The result is a program you can watch, or, if you're of a mind to, just listen to. I have a hunch that's what Waring is aiming at. Pictorially Waring—or rather General Electric, which is sponsoring it—has spared no expense. Besides the cast of 60, which is supposedly the largest permanent cast in television, Waring is operating on a stage which is tiered in three sections, each containing a turntable for scene changes. The photography and lighting are lovely.

He Misses on Hugh

WHERE Waring's picture sense has failed him is in the act featuring Hugh Brannum, the Uncle Lumpy character who tells those wonderful Little Orley stories. Brannum merely tells the stories, accompanied by the orchestra and glee club, as he would on the radio. It's pretty dull TV fare. My suggestion here would be an animated cartoon, with Brannum's voice in the background. It would probably be prohibitively expensive as most of the things I would like to see on television are.

My most serious reservation, though, concerns what I refer to as Waring's editorial section. Editorially, Waring is strongly opposed to war, poverty and cancer and equally militant in favor of peace, our country and safe driving. Well, I'm with him four-square on all those platforms but I'm not sure his manner of expressing them furthers the causes in any respect. Along toward the end of the program, he's likely to spring a soap opera on you concerning, say, a wounded veteran of the first World War while in the background the glee club sings the "Battle Hymn of the Republic." This form of sentimentality is a little too rich for my blood.

Closeup—The Chase Girls

Editor Mother, Actress Daughter Have Great Fun

By Tex McCrary and Jinx Falkenburg

FASHIONABLE beaches and bars are cluttered with the wreckage of sons of famous fathers; in the Amazon Age ahead of America, the same fate may await the daughters of famous mothers—but Ilka Chase will not be among them.

Ilka is almost best known in her role as the sharpest-clawed witch of the century—Sylvia in "The Women," by Clare Boothe Luce. We wondered if her skill for that role could be traced to her childhood; Mrs. Chase spiked that idea:

"Ilka wasn't a difficult child. I know what you mean, but she was never difficult. I always remember a report I got from school about her when she was 9. It said, 'This is a strange thing to say about a child, but Ilka is a noble child.'

"And I knew what the teacher meant by that. Even at 9, Ilka had a broad understanding of the world. She was never mean or petty."

She Spared Not

AS AN EDITOR, Mrs. Chase has been a firm believer in the old rule that "an editor's busiest ally should be the wastebasket—keep it full!" And as a mother, raised herself in a Quaker family, she believed in a rigorous raising for Ilka; she did not spare the rod:

"I remember one day when Ilka was 3 years old, I took her to have some gloves fitted. Those were the wonderful days when you could take a hansom cab and leave it waiting outside at $1 an hour. In the shop, Ilka threw a real tantrum—she would put on a pair of gloves and then refuse to take them off. I had to drag her out of the store . . . bodily! She fell asleep on the way home and of course I put her right to bed for a nap, but I told her grandmother I was going to spank her when she woke up. Her grandmother, a Quaker, said to me: 'Now, thee cannot do that!' And my answer was: 'Thee bet I can!'

"And when Ilka woke up, sweet as a little lamb, she got the worst spanking of her life!"

Mrs. Chase believes that all promises to children should be kept by parents—promises of both parties and punishment.

Those Haircuts . . .

THERE are strict rules governing criticism of each other—"Mother doesn't criticize my acting or writing . . . I don't try to tell her how to run Vogue."

But she can criticize Ilka's clothes, the way she looks; for instance: "I think my daughter's haircuts are awful! I don't know why you let them do it to you, dear. Don't you think you could have another haircut soon?"

Ilka suffered a little as a girl from her mother's taste in clothes: "Mother always wanted me to look chic . . . I always wanted to look pretty.

"Once I went to a birthday party—we were supposed to wear 'something simple.' So of course, mother dressed me in severe navy blue, with white collars and cuffs. And of course every other little girl at the party was dressed in flouncy pink and blue organdy. I was never so humiliated in my life. Every game we played, they made me the school teacher. It was awful!"

'New York 22'

ILKA is now hard at work on a third novel, title—"New York 22." The mosaic, middle section of the city, which includes St. Patrick's Cathedral, the Waldorf-Astoria, tenements, and the high fashion homes of Sutton and Beekman Place. Digging through old letters for ideas, she found one she had written her mother from boarding school: "Spring is here. Please, don't you think I could take off my long woolen underwear now?"

More than any mother and daughter I ever met, these two know how to laugh together: "The other day," says Ilka, "we were at lunch, talking and laughing a lot. A man was watching us. By the time we got to dessert, he came by the table and said to us:

"'You must be mother and daughter . . . and I hope you won't mind if I tell you, I've never seen a pair have such fun together!'" TEX.

POSTSCRIPT: As a girl, Ilka used to be introduced as "the daughter of the editor of Vogue," but in 1949, Mrs. Chase says it works the other way—the other day, she called Mr. Leon of Bendel's to ask him to met her for lunch. He was out, but his secretary located him at another restaurant. And so he arrived late to meet Mrs. Chase, and when he came in, he was outraged:

"Mrs. Chase, do you know what happened? When they paged me, they said to me—'Mr. Leon, Miss Ilka Chase's mother would like you to join her for lunch!'"

Ilka has warm but unique memories of her "Life With Mother"—"It's very hard to tell homey stories about mother and me when I was a kid . . . I never could run out to the kitchen and ask Mom for a piece of homemade apple pie, because, you see, Mom was at Vogue!

"But make no mistake—I did not grow up with a complex because my mother wasn't at home in the kitchen all day. And I have always thought that when women criticize successful career-mothers, the critics are secretly jealous!" JINX.

Kayo Put Kirk in the Chips

By Hedda Hopper

HOLLYWOOD—Leo McCreary and Arthur Sheekman are finishing up their script on "Born in a Trunk," and at present Kirk Douglas is the man they most want to star in it. Kirk's salary is now $150,000 per picture. That knockout in "Champion" killed him, but made his bank account . . . John Van Druten and Charlie Brackett are working like mad to finish "Famous," Bing Crosby's next with Celeste Holm. It was John's play, "Damask Cheek," in which Celeste made her first Broadway smash . . . Bing, working against time to finish Dorothy Kirsten's sequence in "Mr. Music" so she could leave for New York, decided to change his pants on the set. A visitor from Kentucky got a rear view of a scene that never hit a camera. It was her first experience on any set. Her husband cracked, "Honey, you hit the jackpot" . . . Louis Calhern gets his wish. Metro will star him in "A Magnificent Yankee." They've finally bought the play, which, as you know, is the life of Oliver Wendell Holmes. Before Lou does this, however, he goes into "Asphalt Jungle." If he's not careful, Calhern will use up his six picture deal in one year and have nothing left for next season.

Tracy Opens 'Metropole' Tomorrow Night at Ford

AFTER scoring a personal hit in last year's drama, "The Traitor," Lee Tracy continues his return to the stage in "Metropole," a comedy reported to be about The New Yorker magazine, opening a week's run tomorrow night at Ford's Theater, Baltimore.

Although he's appeared importantly in 50-odd films, Tracy's always been regarded by the stage with a proprietary eye. He began his fabulous career on the stage and first nights in "Broadway" and "The Front Page" have remained lustrous evenings in playgoers' memories.

In 1938 he was appearing in London in the Alfred Lunt part in "Idiot's Delight" and when the war closed the play, Tracy joined the Army.

Reunited with Tracy is George S. Kaufman, director of "The Front Page" and long Producer Max Gordon's favorite director. Two leading ladies, Edith Atwater and Arlene Francis, top the supporting cast.

Reds Driving U. S. Flicks Out of China

NYNT News Service

HONGKONG. — American movie companies are pulling their product out of China, it has been learned here, because of Communist pressure which makes it almost impossible to show American films in the Red-dominated country.

Some Hollywood movies are still playing in the Shanghai area, but Communist censorship and an anti-American drive in the press are gradually forcing these out, too. Both American and British newsreels have been halted by the Reds in recent weeks because they are "anti-Communist" and "anti-peace" and because they "distort" the news.

Faced with this obvious determination to push them out of the area, the movie companies have shifted their headquarters to Hongkong, abandoning their, last branch offices in Canton.

The anti-American drive in Shanghai is gaining momentum, and a special censorship office has been established to sift whatever Hollywood productions are still playing. Such pictures as "The Postman Always Rings Twice," "Mother Wore Tights" and similar films without a message, have been cited as examples of "moral degradation," and therefore unworthy of Chinese patronage. The staff of one theater already has forced the management to withdraw one American film, and more action of this sort can be expected.

Salute to Kids Slated

Salute to the kids of the Nation in the form of a radio special is in preparation for ABC. It is being presented on behalf of the National Kids Day Foundation under auspices of the Kiwanis Clubs. Program guests are to be those stars who also are parents, such as Bing Crosby, Edgar Bergen, Bob Hope and Arthur Godfrey. Harry Von Zell is MC. Date is the night of November 17.—(AP).

HIT AT KEITH'S: Joanne Dru, pretty thing, is the leading lady of Keith's holdover Western, "She Wore a Yellow Ribbon," a John Ford production starring John Wayne

Guild to Run Buses for 'Brigadoon'

THE THEATER GUILD announces that its bus service between Washington and Baltimore will be resumed this season for its subscription season starting November 28 with the musical play "Brigadoon."

Guild members have been asked to make their reservations at once for the bus which takes passengers from Washington's National Theater to Baltimore's Ford's.

Miss Bess Davis Schreiner, director of the series, has her office hours in the National mezzanine floor on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday afternoons from noon till 5:30.

Fairlington to Do 'Blithe Spirit'

The Fairlington Players will present Noel Coward's "Blithe Spirit" for four nights opening Wednesday at the Fairlington School, South Fairlington.

Heading the cast as the author who tried to establish contact with his dead wife and then regrets it is Douglas MacList. Betty Caldwell has the title role, Kip Conlin is the second wife and Betty Faarwell plays the happy medium. Harry Cary and Dorothy Evans complete the cast.

Sue Evans has directed and tickets may be reserved by phoning Edward McCrensky, OVerlook 0871.

Judith Plays A Menace In 'The Furies'

talking to Frances Langford and Jon Hall about playing parts in "Circus Lady." If Frances plays the lead, I'll bet she'll do a Jenny Lind, and sing from the back of an elephant.

FLEXIBLE PART: Madeleine Carroll wasn't well enough to play the part, so Judith Anderson gives Barbara Stanwyck plenty of menace in "The Furies." She plays the woman Walter Huston brings home, which starts the fireworks. Judith sure started a nice blaze in "Rebecca." . . . Wonder why Clark Gable and Joan Harrison are so secretive about their dining dates. Except for Paulette Goddard, he sees more of Joan than any gal in town. But it's all so hush-a-by baby . . . Charles Mendl's return will liven up the town. Nunnally Johnson and Charlie Brackett are both tossing parties for him. . . . Capt. Eddie Molyneux, the French designer, heads here to visit Mendl and design a wardrobe for Gertie Lawrence. . . . Travis Banton is set to design Irene Dunne's clothes in her next RKO pictures. Irene, thank heaven, will be mighty dressy. Any girl with a chassis like hers should dress it up, not down, as she did in "I Remember Mama." . . . Lucille Ball and Desi Arnaz have been trying to get to Puerto Rico for years. Now they're set to go for a "Duffy's Tavern" appearance . . . John Carroll's making passes at Yvonne de Carlo for his Indies picture, "Briar Bush." . . . Judy Canova's off for some one-night stands through Indiana, Illinois and Michigan.

Jewish Center To Resume Film Revival Series

The Jewish Community Center announces that beginning Wednesday it will resume its biweekly film revival series, interrupted during the summer.

The programs are presented in Cafritz Auditorium, 16th and Q sts. and are operated on a nonprofit basis. Director of Activities Daniel Thursz reports that the purchase of new equipment has solved acoustical difficulties of the earlier series.

This Wednesday night's picture, at 8:30, will be "The Long Voyage Home," that series of four Eugene O'Neill sea plays with John Wayne, Thomas Mitchell, Barry Fitzgerald and Ian Hunter in the cast.

CREW-CUT: Jose Iturbi, once one of the long-haired musical set's favorites, has figuratively gone crew-cut in his appeal to the movie masses. Iturbi's starred with Kathryn Grayson and Mario Lanza in "That Midnight Kiss," returning to F st. Thursday at the Columbia

Mary Washington to Do Play

THE Mary Washington College of the University of Virginia at Fredericksburg this season looks forward to full activity by its drama department.

The season will begin with the production on Nov. 18-19 of "The Women." Ibsen's "A Doll House" will be presented in March and Molnar's "The Guardsman" in May.

Once more the College Theater will embark on its tours to colleges in the neighborhood, going to both William and Mary and the University at Charlottesville.

Director Warfield also hopes to arrange exchanges of plays with schools in the Washington vicinity and will welcome correspondence on this matter.

Hit Parade Eyes TV

The NBC Hit Parade sponsor is reported to be looking into the possibility of returning to television. Last year he had a movie series based on famous stories. Now he is checking into an hour drama which would have Robert Montgomery as the lead.—(AP).

Movie Moguls Are Simply Stuck With the Blame

the same time, which means that when you apply any yardstick other than money you're talking in a vacuum.

Almost Worth It

I'M THE last person in the world to deny that Hollywood does turn out many entertaining pictures; I go to the movies for a living because I like pictures. I've found, for instance, that one good one can be worth sitting through scores of lemons, well almost.

But for every Dore Schary who turns out a picture like the splendid "Battleground," which, alas, won't be along for a while, there is always the factory-built drivel tricked out with enough imbecility to try Job.

And since the big movie makers have to accept the factory-belt system of crashing dullness, trends, sickeningly impossible love stories and general vulgarity, they're more or less stuck with having to take the blame for their system as well as the praise that comes their way.

Which seems a shame, for the Messrs. Johnston, Schary, Murphy, Lawford, Hodiak and Stevens are such nice guys they shouldn't be getting complexes.

Britten's Opera Great In Condensed Version

BENJAMIN BRITTEN'S recent visit to Washington brings to mind again his opera, "The Rape of Lucretia."

The brilliant condensed version of this work was released on HMV discs some time ago and since last May has been available on domestic Victor labels. The American set is Victor 1288, costing $11. You'll find this as exciting as almost any opera on records, and it's in understandable English.

Francaix: Concertino for piano and orchestra. Jean Francaix and Berlin Philharmonic under Leo Borchard. CT 89-80108. $1.25.

Jean Francaix has often been described as one of the promising younger French composers. Hitherto he has been known on records chiefly for his piano concerto. That concerto is at times witty and brilliant.

This concertino is his best piece for any larger combination of instruments. It is one of the most delightful works of its kind and one which any record buyer would enjoy. The recording is excellent and a great bargain. No single record will give you more pleasure than this one.

BIZET: Patrie Overture. National Symphony Orchestra under Roger Desormiere. LA (London Decca) 102. $5.

Here is a brilliant piece of writing, one of Bizet's best pieces, and one of his most neglected. It has also some of the handsomest recording London or Decca have yet put out.

Furthermore, French conductors often succeed in putting just the right spirit into French music. Desormiere is outstanding for his gifts in dramatic music. This is a fine set, two records, and full, big sounding orchestral tone. Try it, and you'll probably buy it.

Haydn: Quartet Opus 64, No. 5. Budapest String Quartet. Columbia 853. $4.

Haydn wrote nine quartets in D Major. This is one of the more famous, probably because it has the catching subtitle of "The Lark." It is a beauty, and beautifully played here.

It would be interesting to know if Washingtonians who have the weekly opportunity of hearing the Budapest men in the flesh find their recorded tone slightly better balanced than their line tone. I do.

It seems to me a matter of the tone quality of the first violin which is better blended with the other instruments on records than in the Library of Congress. In any case, the players never sound better than in this set. Their knowledgeability in Haydn is special, and so is the music. What more could you ask, with good recording?

CHOPIN: Two Polonaises, two waltzes, one nocturne, one etude, and the Fantasy-Impromptu. Andre Kostelanetz and his orchestra. Columbia 840. $5.

This is my nomination for the worst set of the year—in every way—most hackneyed Chopin music, most horrible arrangements for orchestra, and the worst possible taste in playing.

The essence of Chopin is the piano—his harmonies are unique and need no such flossing up—and how can anyone, even Kostelanetz, think this sounds like anything but musical hogwash?

Week's Program For Symphony

AN important American symphony shares this week's National Symphony program with the first piano concerto of Brahms. It is the second symphony of Paul Creston.

SHURE

It was introduced to Washington two years ago by Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra, who are including it in their repertoire again this season. It is a rather brief work but of unusual excitement.

Leonard Shure, soloist in the Brahms, was called upon several times last season to substitute for Vladimir Horowitz—few pianists could attempt the job. Shure won handsome commendation wherever he went.

Howard Mitchell opens the program with one of the big three overtures of Weber, the Euryanthe, and brings our first hearing locally of Ravel's Valses nobles et sentimentales.

The Music Box

Kell to Play Thursday at Western High

THE Georgetown Concert Group opens this week, with no less than Reginald Kell, probably the best known clarinet player in the world. Kell will play Thursday at 8:30 p. m. in Western High School auditorium.

He will be assisted by the violinist and pianist of the Albeneri Trio: Erich Itor Kahn and Giorgi Ciompi. The series promises Wanda Landowska on December 1; admission is by series ticket only—but tickets are only $7.50 for 12 concerts.

THE Institute of Contemporary Arts announces a dance recital by Jose Limon for Lisner Auditorium on November 30 in the evening. Limon has a remarkable name for the originality of his designs in dancing. He will bring his company with him.

The Institute's music department has been commissioned by St. Mark's Church in Worcester, Mass., to compose a "set of masses". for the church. How many a "set" may mean is not clear—we presume actually that a single mass has been requested. The important fact is that a church today recognizes the need for and importance of contemporary expression in its music and comes to a group of progressive musicians to try and find an answer.

Reginald Kell . . . plays Thursday at Western High School

The church is of the Anglican communion and hopes to secure some masses in which the congregation can join in the Ordinary. Paul Callaway, organist and choirmaster of Washington Cathedral, wrote such a work several years ago for St. Agnes Church of this city.

THE WASHINGTON and Cathedral Choral Societies are now engaged in preparing Handel's Messia for December performance in Constitution Hall. Paul Callaway will hold auditions for tenors and basses on Monday evening at 7:30 in Whitby Hall, Woodley rd. and Wisconsin ave. on the Cathedral Close.

Six glee clubs from the Washington area will join in concert in Constitution Hall on December 1. The choruses of George Washington, Maryland, and Catholic universities will join with the Telephone Glee Club, the Chevy Chase Chanters, and the National Press Club Chorus. Tickets are on sale at the Snow Concert Bureau.

Gladys Swarthout's recital on November 29 will be sponsored by the local chapter of alumnae of the College of St. Catherine in St. Paul, Minn.

Woodrow Wilson High School music department students will present the Red Mill in their auditorium on the 17th and 18th of this month.—P. H

ON RECORDS

ONE ATTRIBUTE of a good songwriter is that he have a strong inborn affection for his old home town. True, the fellow may have been born in the midst of a mosquito-infested marsh; but he must nonetheless be willing to substitute nostalgia for malaria and profess his fond recollections of the dear old swampland with an avidity that would do justice to the guy who went out there looking for Chloe.

This is not to belittle the general idea of writing songs about the old home town. Two recent songs of this type are quite engaging, and manage to hit the spot with the accuracy of a homing pigeon. The fact that both have been recorded by one Mr. Bing Crosby may account for some of my sentiments in their favor.

"Way Back Home" represents the first combined effort by Crosby and the Fred Waring singers since "The Whiffenpoof Song" of happy memory. The song, an old one, was composed by Fred's brother Tom Waring, who must have worn out a rhyming dictionary producing such couplets about the virtues of home as "the plants the fruitiest, the stars the shootiest", and "home foods the spreadiest, old wines the headiest". Needless to say, the Waring Glee Club performs the number with fraternal care; and Bing himself is in fine fettle.

THE SECOND Crosby record concerns itself with the "Dear Hearts and Gentle People" one finds in the old home town. The melody proceeds at a brisk pace, and embodies some of the exhilarating appeal of the more rhythmic spirituals. The accompaniment is most unusual, consisting of a chorus of guitars, abetted by the Jud Conlon singers.

The title "Dear Hearts and Gentle People" originated with Stephen Foster. Those words were found scribbled on a piece of paper in Foster's pocket at the time of his death in a Bowery flop house. Crosby sings the words "Home Sweet Home" at the conclusion of the record, possibly intended to give the lyric a Stephen Foster flavor. The idea is musically effective, albeit historically inaccurate, as Stephen Foster was not the composer of "Home Sweet Home."

Bing's warm-hearted performance of "Dear Hearts and Gentle People" is on the back of his recording of "Mule Train." Many feel that "Dear Hearts" will retain its hold on the public fancy long after "Mule Train" has joined "Nature Boy" and "Open the Door, Richard" in the realm of things hastily embraced but quickly forgotten.

FROM A DISK JOCKEY'S MEMO PAD: Margaret Whiting is at her tasteful best in "Festival of Roses" (Capitol). Like "Moon Love," "Tonight We Love," and sundry other popular items, the melody was borrowed from Tchaikovsky. Unless my memory has slipped a notch, this one is "Danse Des Mirlitons" (Dance of the Reed-pipes) from the Nutcracker Suite . . . Perry Como struggles rather unsuccessfully with a mournful work called "Hush, Little Darlin'" (RCA Victor). The song is a lullaby and, true to its purpose, is guaranteed to lull you to sleep . . . Last year Gene Autry had the field all to himself with "Here Comes Santa Claus," which he composed and recorded. Among this year's versions, the one by Doris Day (Columbia) is particularly outstanding. Doris is pert and lively as ever, and the sleighbell rhythm and celeste provide a delightful background. The kids will love this one, especially if they're old enough to prefer Doris Day to Gene Autry . . . A hit record is not only money in the bank for a recording star, it's an insurance policy as well. The family of Maj. Glenn Miller has received hundreds of thousands of dollars from the sales of Glenn's records since his death. And, while Buddy Clark left only $12,000 in the bank, his family will continue to receive some $6000 a year in record royalties for their support.

Eddie Gallaher is heard on WTOP every day except Sunday on the Sundial, 7:45 to 9:30 a. m.; Moondial, 11:25 p. m. to 12:30 a. m.

More About Schonberg

take up the later, and more controversial man, when his latest biography is published.

The text for Gurre-Lieder is by Jens Jacobsen, the Danish writer who, according to Rainer Maria Rilke, wrote "the greatest novel of all times." The poem for Gurre-Lieder concerns the young King Waldemar and his ill-starred love for Tove, a beautiful young maiden. Waldemar, forced by political considerations, to marry Hedwig, has built a castle, called Gurre, where Tove lives in lonely anticipation of his infrequent visits.

When Hedwig discovers the situation she sends her favorite falcon, who kills Tove. Waldemar, in his rage and grief, curses God and is doomed to ride forever through the night with his followers, in search of a rest they will never know.

Three Parts

THE WORK is divided into three sections. The first part is a series of passionate songs between Tove and Waldemar telling of their love. The language is incredibly bold in its rich imagery, and the music mounts in similar vein.

Part two is the Song of the Wood-Dove. This section was performed by Leopold Stokowski and the New York Philharmonic just a week ago, with Martha Lipton as soloist. In it, the dove brings word of the tragic death of Tove and of Waldemar's consuming sorrow.

The final portion, requiring the use of four separate choruses plus soloists and a narrator. This is the only part of the whole score which looks forward to the coming use of what Schonberg calls "sprech-stimme" or "voice-speaking."

Once in U. S.

GURRE-LIEDER has been performed only once in this country. Stokowski gave it New York and Philadelphia hearings with his orchestra back in 1934. Fortunately Victor records recorded every note of one of those performances in a brilliant album which they have recently rereleased to a public which demanded the reissue.

The album is numbered 128 in the Victor catalog and contains some of the finest playing and singing on records. From this one can see all the Wagnerisms of the early composer. But in the final scenes and choruses there is the clear hand of one who is going forward from a period in which every kind of romantic expression has been squeezed.

We will discuss the path Schonberg took from 1912 on in our second installment of the Schonberg problem.

At the Bridge Table

Plenty of Play at Home This Week

By Marian H. Barre

TWO ACBL tournaments are on this weekend, at Norfolk, Va., and Easton, Pa. After them and until the National Contract Championships open in Philadelphia on December 3, even the most confirmed tourney-troupers will play the local circuit instead of seeking master points abroad. And there is plenty of activity at home.

Among master point events this week are the following:

First session of the knockout team-of-four championships at the F. A. Walker Duplicate Club tonight at 1511 North Quincy st., Arlington, dates of subsequent sessions will be announced later. This match is restricted to the club membership.

The Washington Bridge League's bimonthly, Wednesday at Hotel Roosevelt—an early section starts play at 7:30 p. m. later groups at 8 p. m.

At the Chess Club on Thursday at 7:45. This game has been advanced a week as the regular "fourth Thursday," would fall on Thanksgiving, when the club will be closed.

The Riverside Bridge Club, Arlington Farms, also on Thursday at 7:45.

The Stephan Club monthly Friday, 8 p. m., in Euclid Studios.

Euclid Studios' Saturday matinee at 1 o'clock.

In addition to this list, there are rating point games every evening and two afternoons, Wednesday and Friday.

ACCORDING to the latest ACBL bulletin several players in this vicinity moved up into higher national classifications, Dr. N. J. McHugh and Dr. W. H. Gorton becoming senior masters. The new national masters are Mrs. J. A. Dearing, Mrs. Katherine J. Fenton, E. G. Harris, jr., Capt. and Mrs. J. L. Herlihy, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Richter, Mrs. Florence Millspaugh, Mrs. T. T. Turner and Mrs. Hal Cook.

In the war of the sexes, ammunition for the distaff side can be found in WBL records, where individual averages must be carefully compiled for season contests. Among "Group A" players, which includes those holding 50 or more master points, there is one lone man among the five top leaders. He is C. C. Johnson, third on the list since he is outranked by Mrs. W. M. McIntyre and Mrs. R. H. Skinner. In the "B" group, on the other hand, men hold seven leading positions, Vic Zeve, first; Harold Mayer, second. Among class "C" members, Mrs. James Adler upholds the fair sex among four male leaders. Dr. Leroy Robins, a newcomer, heads this list.

THE National Press Club will hold the second game in its duplicate series on Thursday evening, Paul Golden directing. Winners in the opening match were Mr. and Mrs. John Mantle, Mr. and Mrs. Donald Myrick were runners-up, both pairs are newcomers.

Mrs. T. D. Sheldon, formerly of our town, now of Muskegon, Mich., spent last weekend here. Paired with Mrs. E. R. Shepard she won a master point in the Agriculture Bridge Game, where top the other way went to Paul Kalavski and George Lassise. Despite limited opportunities at home, Mrs. Sheldon is an accredited National Master. She must travel far afield to play in nationally awarded games.

The majority of WBL members qualified for the Winners' Game last Wednesday, eligibles forming two large sections while only 16 pairs played in the nonwinners' game. Among duos that captured the double awards were the J. E. Stavers, senior and junior, new men's champs at the Walsh Club. Other leaders included Miss K. McNutt-W. K. O'Loughlin, Mrs. George Kathan-Mrs. John Fletcher, J. G. Stone-L. G. Tubbs (the latter pairs tied), L. Fruitman-John Luttrell.

In the runner-up list were Mr. and Mrs. F. P. Dormady, Mrs. M. Boschan-Dr. E. M. Short, Miss Laura Hunter-C. C. Lovenberg. Leaders in the other group were Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Moore, Mrs. Sue Gantt-Edward Clifford.

At the Count Club monthly national awards were shared by the Bernard Rossons and Capt. and Mrs. J. L. Herlihy. W. A. Poissant and his out-of-town guest, J. M. Calloway, jr., Miss Hunter, Miss McNutt were runners-up.

MRS. S. H. BEASLEY and Mrs. Robert DuBois led the field at the matinee match at La Salle Studios, with Mrs. R. H. Skinner and Mrs. M. L. Fisher, second.

While the Stavers, father and son, were capturing the state championship at the Walsh Club, Mrs. J. G. Seabourne and Mrs. George King, jr., were garnering distaff laurels.

Members of the Women's Auxiliary, and their spouses, friends of members, with or without spouses, turned out to make the annual benefit for Children's Hospital a success. The exact amount realized cannot be tabulated until all returns are in.

The event was played last Friday at Hotel Burlington.

Besides Mrs. Sheldon, another former Washingtonian, paid a fleeting visit to the home town last week. She was Mrs. Jack Long, now of Tallahassee, Fla.

New York luminary, Fred D. Kaplan, who in the past was a frequent visitor here, made an unannounced appearance at a recent WPL match, winning his section paired with Howard G. Campbell.

NBC Plotting Big TV Show Thanksgiving

NEW YORK, Nov. 12 (AP).—It's going to cost an estimated $150,000 to put on a special holiday television show the night of Thanksgiving. That includes the price of hooking up 25 or more NBC-TV network stations.

The biggest part of the outlay, however, is going for talent, since the intention is to use such personalities as Milton Berle, George Jessel and the Ritz Brothers. The sponsor (Elgin) is making arrangements for an hour and a half production which already is labeled as the "costliest television show yet."

The theme is to be general vaudeville—song, dance, comedy, with a lot of special sets. Stations not on the network direct will relay the program from a film recording.

In the past this sponsor has put his holiday show on the radio in the afternoon as a two-hour presentation, starting in war days on CBS, and last year switching to NBC.

Klavan Thinks Everybody's Inferior

HAYES, now general manager at WTOP, auditioned prospective post-midnight disk jockey material here and negotiated Klavan away from WAAM in Baltimore where he was doing a once-a-week TV show.

Before that he was with Baltimore's WITH as a disk jockey and earned a handsome Hooper.

Klavan, whose name "doesn't mean a thing" as he explains it with modest double entendre, did a wartime disk show on Guam for the Armed Forces Radio Services, rewrote the traveling soldier show, "Bedtime Stories for Adults" and played it on Tinian, Saipan and in the Philippines.

After a fitful return to college after the war, a short stint in the magazine business and a season as a radio newsman Klavan settled into the disk jockey groove.

It Fits Him Well

IT'S A GROOVE that seems to fit him well except that I begin to doubt his acumen in some radio matters. The night we were hunting stay-up-laters, we naturally found WWDC's all-night man awake and alert in the wee hours. Since WWDC's Alan Cummings and Klavan are old Baltimore radio alumni, they held old home week in the corridor, leaving me with the open microphone and some teletype sports news to read. Something about the Bruins, making a touchdown at third base, as I remember it.

And while the two boys were gossiping in the hall, I was doing such a sensational job with the sports news that I got a $500-dollar a week offer to do it regularly on Capital Transit Radio. The offer, relayed through Bill Gold of the District Line, came from a group of taxi owners. It's something about driving people off the buses and into the taxis or something.

What I mean about Klavan lacking radio sense, he didn't understand about the offer I got. Just kind of looked embarrassed when I told him, and said for me to get Bill Gold to explain it.

Still, a very astute radio guy in all other respects.

THERE'S Conrad Nagel and Frank Telford and me. Experts on the "Silver Theater" television program is what we are.

Nagel is one up on Director Telford and me in a way, because, besides being emcee of the month and a half old television show (WOIC, 8 p. m. Mondays) he was emcee for years of the radio version of "Silver Theater."

But then Telford and I are one up on him, because we've seen all of the shows used so far in the series, plus one which was rehearsed and never used. (It looked a bit seedy even at first rehearsal when I saw it, and Telford developed a revulsion for it along about the fifth rehearsal, and substituted something else.)

Klavan . . . he writes his own.

Tomorrow night, Nagel and I will be one up on Telford because we'll both be on the show, along with Louise Albritton and Henry Morgan, who'll appear in the comedy drama. Nagel will do his usual emcee job. I'll pin a silver medal on the best supporting player in the first five shows. (Didn't think I was watching each and every show for fun only, did you?)

This is the first of a series of Silver Awards to be made to the outstanding supporting players in the series, an idea whipped up more than likely to emphasize the International Silver Co.'s sponsorship of the show, but a jolly good idea just the same.

The recipient of first award? Try channel 9 along about 3 minutes before the show signs off tomorrow night. Can't lose much; Arthur Godfrey's on immediately afterward.

A. U. to Conduct Publicity Clinic

Hazel Markel, director of program service, WTOP, and Elinor Lee, director of community service, WTOP, will be among the "teachers' at the publicity clinic taking place on the campus of American University November 17, under the joint auspices of Theta Sigma Phi, national professional fraternity for women in journalism, and the public relations division of American University.

Also participating in the radio section will be Ruth Crane, director of women's activities, WMAL and WMAL-TV, and Mary Burnham, assistant director at the same station.

The Washington Philatelist

Issuing of Commemoratives Should Be Left to Postoffice

By William M. Stuart

THE National Federation of Stamp Clubs records 76 percent of its membership—result of a poll—as favoring a plan to establish a new commission for the purpose of issuing commemorative stamps. Such a project is favored in various philatelic circles, but is far from being generally accepted as a perfect plan for the improvement of philatelic conditions.

STUART

The Postoffice Department is on record as being definitely opposed to establishment of a stamp commission. Officials of the department in opposing the proposition declare it would handicap, rather than help, the work of issuing stamps. Many criticisms of the stamp program may be charged to personal and political motives. In a recent address Third Assistant Postmaster General Joseph J. Lawler stated he hoped collectors would not be too persistent regarding this new idea.

However, concerning the issuance of postage stamps, it would be wise to leave all handling of such to leading officials of the department who are fully equipped for any service.

THE Aero-Postal Stationery Society is in process of formation. George D. Kingdom, Box 37, Conneaut, Ohio, is organizing secretary and the charter membership is $2, list to remain open until January 1, 1950.

As a recognition of the service rendered by the Boy Scouts of the Philippines, the Manila postoffice used as its official postmark for outgoing mail for a week the Boy Scout slogan: "1949 Boy Scout Week, October 31-November 6."

At the dead letter sale at the main Washington postoffice on November 3, 230 lots of stamps, covers and coins were sold, bringing $1282.25. Prices were high, many lots of foreign stamps selling at $20. The highlight of the sale was a 50-peso Mexican gold coin, said to be in "perfect" condition, that sold for $50. A German gold coin, 20 marks, brought $20.50.

The Capital Precancel Club will meet tomorrow evening at the home of Dr. Chester Uhler, 3534 Quesada st. nw.

Australia will issue on November 28 a 2½-d., stamp honoring the late Lord Forrest of Bunbury, a noted explorer. The stamp will remain on sale for three months. A portrait of Lord Forrest is the chief design and is printed in red. The perforations are 14½ x 14 and the stamps will be printed in sheets of 60.

The Netherlands postal system has issued a set of charity stamps for 1949, which will be valid from November 14 to December 31, 1950, though they will be on sale only from November 14 to December 31, 1949. The stamps were printed by Enschede & Zonen and the designer is Hub Levigne. The stamps: 5 plus 3 cents, red, representing summer; 2 plus 3 cents, golden brown, autumn; 20 plus 7 cents, blue, New Year; 10 plus 5 cents, gray, winter, and 6 plus 4 cents, green, spring. The stamps are printed in sheets of 100 stamps.

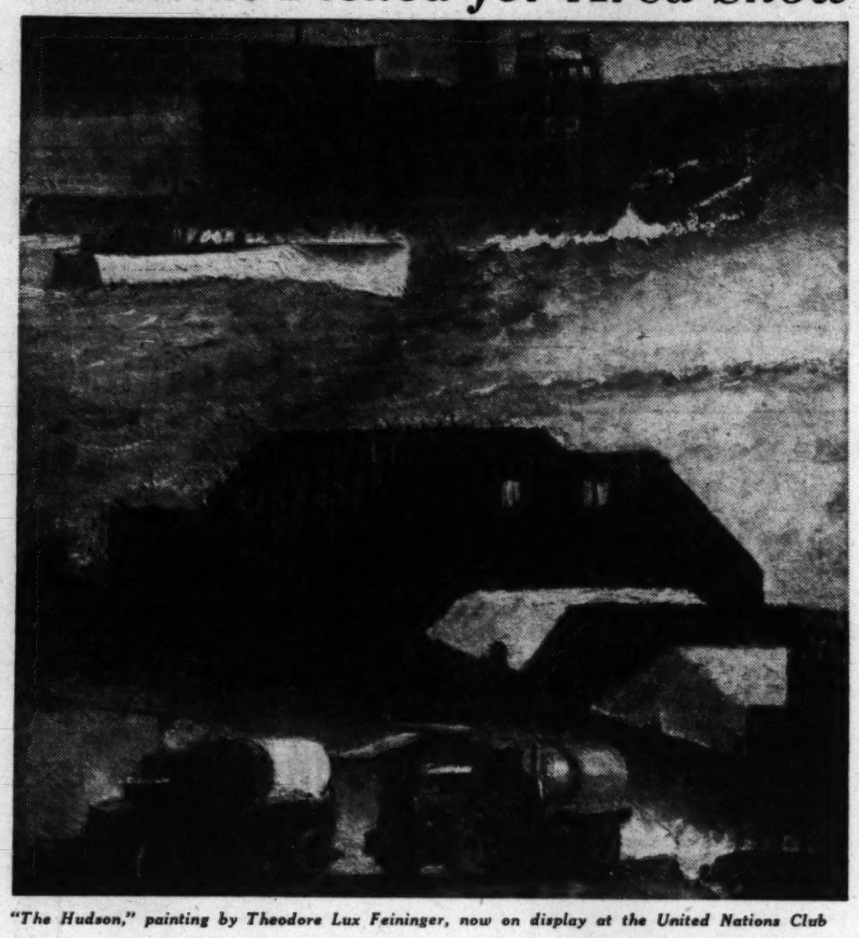
THE Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., met in Pythian Temple Tuesday evening, A. G. Galloway presiding. Richardson A. Libby, who is interested in the work of the Boy Scouts, exhibited a frame of the Boy Scouts' stamps of the world and told about the movement of scouting in all parts of the world represented on the stamps. It is all part of a campaign urging the Postoffice Department to issue a scout stamp in 1950. The speaker is one of the leaders in this movement.

Through the courtesy of Isaac Gregg, formerly of the Postoffice Department, first day covers and the late issues of Korean stamps were exhibited. They were a gift to Gregg from Dr. Syngman Rhee, president of the recently established government of Korea. Dr. Rhee was a guest of the club at the time the Korean stamp was issued. An auction will be the feature at the meeting on Tuesday at Pythian Temple, 1012 9th st. nw.

The Philatelic Agency reopened on Monday morning after the fire of a week ago. The agency was not damaged in spite of the tons of water poured into the building. The stock of five million dollars in stamps was unharmed.

Heartening Experience

270 Items Picked for Area Show



"The Hudson," painting by Theodore Lux Feininger, now on display at the United Nations Club

By Jane Watson Crane

IT IS characteristic that the artist-jurors for this year's Corcoran Annual of the Washington area should address their only prepared statement to those whose work was not accepted. They worked long and conscientiously to pick a show from about twice as many entries as last year. They ended with a little over 270 works in the various media, oils having the majority. When through with this part of their onerous job, they singled out prize winners and honorable mentions. These will be announced next weekend, and we have no wish to let any cats out of the bag before.

As will be recalled, the painter, Franklin Watkins of Philadelphia, and the sculptor, Oronzio Maldarelli of New York, accepted the Corcoran's invitation to act as one-man juries in their respective fields. They are both busy men, teachers and practicing artists, who undertook it as an obligation which they felt they owed to their profession. Their statement, which will appear in the exhibition catalogue, contains no glittering generalities, no summations derived from clutching at straws in the wind to indicate whether, artistically speaking, Washington is heading this way or that.

They will leave behind considerable curiosity as to their reactions to individual and collective accomplishment, but no doubt of their desire to stress that the experience of art is a two-way affair, shared by the artist and those with whom he can communicate.

Modesty, Brevity

IN A STATEMENT in which modesty is matched with brevity, the jurors say in part:

"The good artist reaching beyond that which is known and acknowledged will bring us a new experience, if by good fortune we are conditioned to perceive it. However, the biographies of many artists show that the cycle of communication may be sadly delayed." Addressing themselves to those whose work was not included, they say, "You should understand that we as jurors are fully conscious of our fallibility in this regard. We are practicing artists; our perception may be modified from day to day by the impact of new experience, which may change our attitude and opinions tomorrow."

The whole experience of this year's Corcoran Washington area show seems to us a heartening one. The artists of the community came in with twice as many entries as last year, and the Corcoran got a greater support from individuals in a position to put up prize money. The attitude of the jury was constructive. At a time when there is a tendency among jurors to jump from the entries of the most obviously skillful to the "primitive" or artistically illiterate, the people in between seem here to have been given a fair chance.

These jurors seem to have been not so much interested in the freaks and the stunts, as in the honest effort of those with respect for their medium and a knowledge of what they are up to. We recognized, for example, the work of a number of teachers in the District, and also the work in some cases of those whom they consider their most promising students or gifted alumni. We spotted the work of practicing professionals and also of those who devote every moment they can spare to painting or sculpture, not with the hope of earning a living by it or acquiring a big reputation, but simply because they can't give it up. We all know that sincerity alone does not make an artist, but how far can one get without it?

Contest Show Now Open at Smithsonian

THE TWELFTH Metropolitan Art Contest show at the Smithsonian (The National Collection of Fine Arts) is large (324 items) and covers a wide range, from oils to ceramics, jewelry, and miniature furniture. Among the painting and sculptures, there will be a few duplications of entrants with those in the Corcoran, but each exhibition has separate character of its own and their overlapping will add rather than detract from the interest.

The show at the Smithsonian was selected by a local jury composed of Henry Olson of Wilson Teachers College faculty, Lona Keplinger, painter and teacher, and R. W. Berry, an architectural engineer. Prizes in all classes were awarded, with first in each as follows: Oils, Ralph de Burgos for "Bouquet;" water colors and pastels, Bruno Beran for "Roseli;" sculpture, Polly Wayne Kitelle for "Jonathan;" black and white, Richard Paine for a portrait of a man in pencil; miniatures, Ruel P. Tolman for Mrs. Fischer;" jewelry, Olaf Saugstad for work in silver, metalcraft, Edna Miles for a tray.

The art contest is an annual affair, sponsored by the D. C. Chapter of the American Artists' Professional League with the cooperation of the Entre Nous Club.

Because of the size of the group and the limitations of space, the entries are hung close together and in some cases paintings are shown one over the other.

It is hard to single out individual items, but we would like to mention work by the following, which seemed to us to stand out as we circled the room: Roger M. Rittase (who got a second among the oils), Elizabeth Sharp McDonald (a second in sculpture for her carved wood relief)), Herb Fichter, Margaret Keshishian, Theodore Kane, Josephine Danforth, Minor Jameson, Florence Everhart, Ethel Dawson, Tracy Coleman, E. Wilder Lincoln, Wilda P. Mackenzie, Fritzi Morrison, Garnet Jex, Henry Olson, Vassili Neucrow, Frank Alston, Norma Rose, Ruth Starr Rose and Caroline Bean.

Since the applied arts are included, it is a pity that these sections do not attract more entries. As it is, these worthwhile inclusions are too fragmentary and except for the ceramics, swing to the traditional rather than the creatively experimental.

Art Notes

Baltimorean Having Show In New York

EDWARD ROSENFELD, Baltimore artist and frequent exhibitor in Washington, is having his annual one-man show in New York at the Babcock Galleries, until December 3. Included are recent paintings of New England and of Tyson st. in Baltimore, an area once delapidated and now rejuvenated, where the artist has made his home before and since.

Robert Gates' show of recent work at the Whyte Gallery should be particularly interesting to artists, because of his experimental use of media. In some of the paintings he has combined wax crayon with water color or ink wash; in others he uses glue tempera, or casein. The exhibit differs from his previous shows in color and design, and some figure studies call attention to a seldom exhibited phase of his work.

Marcella Comes will have an exhibition of her paintings at Chequire House in Alexandria beginning November 15. The group will include landscapes and portraits.

The National Academy of Design has opened its 124th annual autumn show at 1083 5th ave. in New York.

During the Van Gogh exhibit at the Metropolitan Museum in New York, which will continue through January 15, 1950, there will be a regular daily schedule for the running of the film depicting the life of the artist in terms of his paintings. The film, which was made in Paris in 1948, includes 27 examples of his work which may be seen in the exhibit. Admission for the film showing is 10 cents, including Federal tax.

Opening November 27 at the Silver Spring Art Center, 9216 Flower ave., is an exhibition containing paintings by Rowland Lyon, with sculptures by Clare Fontanini and Hazel Van Natter. The current exhibition is of paintings by James V. Cupoli and sculpture by Florence Bessom Higgs.

Paintings for the memorial exhibition of work by Charles H. Walther at George Washington University have been lent by the Phillips Gallery and by the artist's son. Walther, who died in 1938, studied at the Maryland Institute in Baltimore and with painters in Paris. The show, which will be held in the Lisner Library, will continue to December 9.

That Modern Look

The Headmaster

Dr. Bunche Blames Our Schools for Our Prejudices

By Fred M. Hechinger

"IN DEEP earnestness, I do not believe that our schools, from kindergarten to graduate level, are even mildly discharging their social responsibilities . . ." said Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, director of the United Nations Department of Trusteeship, at a recent University of the State of New York convention. He warned that if education continues to fail in the teaching of "the ABC of human relations" and in the battle against prejudice, "it is, in this day and age, guilty of a crime against humanity."

This week I settled down to frank discussion of this vital educational problem with Dr. Bunche. In his soft-spoken but hard-hitting way, the educator-diplomat went into further details of the American schools' failure to deal with racial and religious prejudices at the levels where they can be fought most successfully: kindergarten, elementary school, and teacher training.

Dr. Bunche, himself a professional educator, scoffed at the "formalized methodology" of our teacher training institutions which are "turning out thousands of teachers each year, equipped with all the streamlined mechanics but without any really effective orientation on human and race relations. Few, if any, are taught to teach inter-group understanding in practice."

Talk of Tolerance

THERE is much talk of "tolerance," Dr. Bunche said, but he pointed out that the very term "tolerance" may be an indication of arrogance and alleged superiority. What is needed instead is an understanding of divergent attitudes, of the conditions which have created such attitudes and of their dangers to society. But in reality even our textbooks — from elementary school up—still do frequent violence to this principle of understanding. Too many of them, particularly in geography and history, Dr. Bunche feels, describe people in foreign lands and our own minority groups in terms of thumbnail stereotypes which are little better than caricatures.

All this, Dr. Bunche continued, is particularly tragic because children do not have innate prejudices; they are given to them by their elders—their parents, teachers, and ultimately by their social contacts in everyday life. It is in the school that prejudice, discrimination and racial or religious myths can be most effectively attacked.

Dr. Bunche spoke from experience. He had his own first years of schooling in Detroit, at a time when anti-Italian feeling was rampant there. Gang warfare and economic competition for jobs intensified animosities against incoming immigrants. "If left in ignorance," Dr. Bunche said, "everybody inherits prejudices. In my early boyhood I was indoctrinated in the community with stereotypes unfavorable to Italians. They were considered inferior in the neighborhood. I rejected those attitudes as soon as I became old enough to understand how unjust and socially dangerous they were. But the point is that the schools I attended did little or nothing to counteract those attitudes. We actually had some classes in which the Italian kids were tacitly segregated—they all sat together."

Time for Effort

OF COURSE, Dr. Bunche adds, there has been improvement in dealing with the most flagrant racial attitudes since his elementary school days. But at the same time he insists that "prejudice and bigotry can never be overcome with mere good will and kind wishes. Talk about unity and understanding is not enough. The only way is through consolidated and fearless effort—a mobilization of enlightened opinion against this form of social disease."

In this battle the schools cannot be held exclusively responsible. But Dr. Bunche insists that the public schools—supported by the money of all taxpayers of all races and creeds—should take the lead. "The schools are in a key position," he told me. "The theory that schools operate in a vacuum has long ceased to be accepted. The school today—through parent-teacher contact and community activities—is as much of an influence on the parent as on the child. Today children and parents actually lead and educate each other, and so the new opportunity of the school to reach all of society through its youngsters is unlimited—but largely untapped."

Hidden Ways

SEGREGATION and discrimination—either openly practiced or in form of "quota systems"—is in itself the basic element in creating tensions, Dr. Bunche said. He illustrated how ridiculous the effects of such policies can be by recalling that a well-known Negro university found itself in the ironical position of considering a tacit quota for white, Jewish applicants to its medical school because they, in turn, found it difficult, because of their religion, to gain admission to many other medical schools.

Dr. Bunche perhaps showed the hidden ways of prejudice most strikingly when he recalled his own farewell from high school in a "mixed" Los Angeles neighborhood. He had just delivered the class address as the valedictorian, when the principal—a kindly man and apparently a competent professional — shook the new graduate's hand.

"Good luck to you, Ralph," he said. "We are sorry to lose you. You know we have never thought of you as a Negro."

Kissproof Kerchief Has Its Advantages

By Orval Hopkins

MISS NATALIE CLADD, our fashion editor, has forwarded to me through official channels a kissproof handkerchief. It's simply a white handkerchief with a large, bright red center. Simultaneously with receiving it, I was struck by the possibilities of a joke, which I hereby tender without charge to some of the corn-purveyors on the television.

Television Comic: Howya like my kissproof handkerchief?

Pretty Girl Stooge: Kissproof handkerchief, eh? How does it work?

TVC: Here, I'll show you. (Kisses her.)

PGS: (Slapping his face) What's kissproof about that?

TVC: Beats me, sis. (Studio audience roars. Home audience shifts uneasily in its seat.)

In fairness, I should report that I tried this gag on my wife and that it got a very indifferent reception. I also, however, tried it on some people who don't know me so well. They thought it was a scream.

THE BALTIMORE & Ohio, speaking of corn, is conniving with Connie B. Gay's Radio (WARL) Ranch to throw a combination square dance and train ride next Saturday evening. You pay your money ($5.85 from Baltimore, $5 from Washington or Silver Spring), get on the B & O special train (4:45 p. m. at Baltimore, Camden Station; 5:35 at Washington; 6:00 at Silver Spring) and arrive at Paw Paw, W. Va., at 8:30, ready and rarin' to reel. Or so says R. F. (Robin) Keefe, a young New Englander who pronounces half hoff, calf coff, and scoff scarf. Robin is sort of impresario (j.g.) for this project and assures me that on the way to Paw Paw there will be lap boards for bridge, canasta (I don't know how Keefe would pronounce that) and other games of skill. Tickets are at the B & O office here, Connecticut and H st. nw., at Union Station and at Silver Spring Station. Happy reeling, all.

A SAD little note comes in pointing out that since funds have not been provided for the United States Travel Division of the National Park Service, the office is being closed. James L. Bossemeyer, chief of the division, says the Sources of Travel Information series of leaflets, the map of the United States showing municipal recreational areas and some other publications may be obtained as long as they last by writing the Director, National Park Service, Washington 25.

BRITISH Overseas Airways Corp. starts service with Boeing "stratocruisers" between England and the United States on December 6. The first service will operate westbound from London for New York. BOAC says it has 10 of the double-deck aircraft on order and that by midsummer next year its luxury-trip frequency over the Atlantic will reach seven round trips a week.

CAPITAL Airlines Thursday inaugurates service into Newport News and Hampton, Va., with three southbound and three northbound flights daily. Three daily flights are scheduled between Washington and the Newport News area, offering morning, noon and night accommodations.

NATIONAL Memorials in Your Capital are doing all right, it's my pleasure to report. Four out of five the past year showed increases in patronage, and the fifth fell only a fraction. In total customers from 1948 to 1949, the Lincoln Memorial is up from 1,504,677 to 1,656,916; the Lincoln Museum from 97,403 to 109,152, the Thomas Jefferson Memorial from 539,524 to 558,040 and the Washington Monument from 804,980 to 857,108. The house where Lincoln died dropped from 53,587 to 53,462.

AMERICAN Export Lines is starting a new schedule on its Mediterranean services on November 29. The lines Excalibur, Exochorda, Exeter and Excambion will sail in rotation from Jersey City every other Tuesday and arrive from 43-day cruises every other Wednesday. The ships call at Marseilles, Naples, Alexandria, Beirut, Alexandria, Piraeus, Naples, Leghorn, Genoa, Marseilles, Boston and New York. The vessels are single-class liners with a capacity of 125 passengers.

The SS Uruguay will sail late in January and the Argentina early in February.

VISITORS to Paris, I'm told, may now enjoy a 2-hour sightseeing tour up and down the Seine on "No. 46," the last surviving example of the passenger steamers which, before the days of subways and buses, were the speediest means of transportation from certain suburbs to the center of Paris. "No. 46" is the same steamer that was used in the film "Devil in the Flesh."

1949 Travel Volume to Break All Records, Says AAA Man

IN SPITE of earlier predictions of a travel recession, the year 1949 will undoubtedly break all records in volume of recreational travel, in the opinion of William G. Bryant, of the American Automobile Association.

Bryant, speaking at the AAA's 47th national convention in Cleveland, estimated that the total travel volume for this year will exceed 1948 by about 12 percent, and that the total expenditure for recreational travel this year will reach nearly ten billion dollars.

"While the number of travelers is higher than in 1948," he said, "the average 1949 traveler was more budget-conscious than he has been at any time since the war. In place of the free and easy spending and the placid acceptance of any kind of accommodation at almost any price, which prevailed a year or so ago, the travelers now are shopping around for accommodations at reasonable prices. We are definitely back in a buyers' market so far as accommodations are concerned."

Bryant said gasoline consumption is running substantially ahead of last year, and that vehicle mileage as reported by the U. S. Bureau of Public Roads is continuing to climb over the peaks of 1948. He said the AAA was compelled to go back to press on virtually all of its travel publications as a result of unprecedented demand on the part of members.

"Competition for the tourist dollar is exceedingly keen this year," the official said. "There is competition among the carriers to woo the traveler from his car into a train, plane, bus or boat. There is competition among the States for a larger share of tourist patronage. There is competition from abroad and there is also keen competition between hotels and motor courts for tourist business."

We Like ST PETERSBURG because it's such a delightful city for the whole family

The Sunshine City is a family city. It is the outstanding resort center of the Gulf Coast; yet it is a clean, orderly community, too.

It is known for its many churches, good schools, beautiful parks and homes . . . but it is also known for its amazing variety of fun in the sun. There is something interesting for everyone of every age to do and enjoy in St. Petersburg. Almost all sports, except those which depend upon snow and ice, are available here . . . and the entertainment and social events are equally varied.

St. Petersburg entertains about 250,000 winter visitors each year -- many of them come back to make their homes here. This is one of the reasons St. Petersburg is Florida's fastest growing city.

You, too, will like St. Petersburg. Plan to come for a wonderful vacation. For free booklets, write to A. C. Davenport, Chamber of Commerce, St. Petersburg, Florida.

Facts About St. Petersburg

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla.—Here are a few facts for winter visitors to this section:

Hotels—There are 200 within the city limits, of every size and price range. The person coming, seeking accommodations in a good, unpretentious hostelry, may expect a winter rate of about $10 a day for a double room with bath. Lower and higher rates depend, of course, on the facilities desired, and the supply seems to be ample.

Apartments — St. Petersburg has 1196 apartment houses, also of wide price range. A medium winter rate would be from $125 to $150 a month.

Bungalows and cottages—These, within the city limits, are scarce, due to a rapidly expanding permanent population. Winter rental of a complete two-bedroom dwelling may run about $150 a month.

Guest rooms—There are many of these in private homes, quite a number with private bath. The winter visitor may expect to pay from $25 to $35 a week for these accommodations.

Motor courts — Probably 150 within the city limits, many of them close in, and many brand new. The average winter rate runs about $8 to $10 a day.

Trailer courts—Many of these in all parts of the city, close-in as well as in outlying sections. Rates range from about $12 a month with utilities, to $25 for the more de luxe lots.

Gulf beaches—Not in the city limits, but easily accessible. Fastest growing area in Florida with every type of visitor accommodations. Rates about like those in St. Petersburg.

The Weekend Jaunt

Take Mahomet to Sugar Loaf Mountain

By Walter W. Hubbard
American Automobile Association

IF MAHOMET MOTORIST wasn't able to go to the mountains this past summer, he may be able to make it, now that fall is here. Sugar Loaf Mountain, about half way between Dickerson and Urbana, Md., is a mountain almost on our District of Columbia doorstep and it is a Sunday motoring objective.

The trip outlined on the A.A.A. map today includes from 115 to 120 miles of driving and it can be easily negotiated in one day if an early start is made, leaving ample time for a little sightseeing and for a campfire luncheon out of doors. Cooking fires on Sugar Loaf Mountain, privately owned, are prohibited, however. So save the bacon, ham, small steaks or "weenies" for another spot, and then break out the thermos bottle with hot coffee or cold milk, plus the soft buns, cookies and, of course, the pickle jar.

Twelve miles of driving north over U. S. 240 will bring us to Montrose, Md., and another 3 miles to Rockville, the county seat of a county named after a Revolutionary War hero. This city was occupied by the Confederates during the War Between the States, and it is from here we make our departure to the left, 3 miles over State 28 bringing us to Hunting Hill.

Great View

THEN through Quince Orchard, Darnestown and Dawsonville and Beallsville from which community we have a 3-mile northward drive to Dickerson at the juncture of State highways 419 and 28. We follow 419 north for 4 miles and we are at Sugar Loaf Mountain. There are ample facilities for picnic lunches here and the view from the mountaintop is "one to write home about." Benches, tables, trash disposal cans and toilet facilities are to be had and, on clear days, it should be a "must" for your camera.

Backtracking over State 419 we return to Dickerson and make a right hand turn and take State 28, cross the historic Monocacy River and make a right hand turn again when we reach U. S. 15 which we follow generally north for a short distance. Then, if we want to see one of the smallest communities in all America, named after one of the world's greatest opera stars, we drive east to Lilypons. The water lillies here, when in bloom, are among the world's prettiest. Back again across the Monocacy, turn right and head for Buckleystown which is 2 miles south of Lime Kiln.

Our motor trip continues on United States 15 to Frederick where, on September 12, 1862, was fought the Battle of South Mountain. In 1864, just before moving on toward Washington, General Jubal Early, Confederate commander, levied a ransom of $200,000 on the city under threat of putting it to the torch.

Most historic of all Frederick houses is the Home of Chief Justice Roger Brooke Taney who authored the Dred Scott decision which, some say, precipitated the Civil War. Seven United States Presidents were sworn into office by Justice Taney, including Abe Lincoln.

Scene of Poem

IN Mount Olivet Cemetery, at the foot of Market st., Francis Scott Key—author of the Star-Spangled Banner—and his wife are buried. After a visit there, and to the Barbara Fritchie House on West Patrick st., scene of the John Greenleaf Whittier poem, we move east over United States 40 to Braddock and then 2 miles to Braddock Heights, a resort on the summit of Cactoctin Mountain which has lodging and amusement facilities.

Gambrill State Park, to the north over United States 40, has nearly 1100 acres. It actually adjoins the Frederick City Park and connects with it by the Ridge Drive. Gambrill State is noted for its laurel display in early summer, and its rugged scenery in late fall; also High Knob, a scenic point overlooking the Monocacy and Middletown Valleys, with the Blue Ridge Mountains in the distance. Two lookout platforms, 1100 feet above the valleys afford a rare opportunity to lovers of scenic grandeur. The park has trails for hiking and picnic areas for day use only.

Driving southeast we reach Frederick again, this time making use of United States 240 all the way back to Washington. Three miles south of Frederick is Araby, which is directly east, across the Monocacy River, from the Monocacy National Battlefield site where Lew Wallace, on July 9, 1864, fought a delaying but losing action with the Confederate forces. Wallace lived to write Ben Hur, a popular novel.

Old Stone Houses

FOUR MILES southeast is Urbana; then on through Hyattstown, a picturesque age-old community with some splendid examples of early American stone houses still in an excellent state of preservation. Four miles more and we are in Clarksburg, from which we motor to Henderson Corner. Two miles south is Middlebrook. Three more miles southeast in the milling and trading town of Gaithersburg, just 5 miles from Rockville.

From Rockville we motor through Montgomery County over the same route we followed on our way up, and we are back again in the District of Columbia. It is convenient to make the trip in one day with an early morning start, but if an overnight stop is planned or desired, the A. A. A. suggests that it be in or around historic Frederick, Md.

This statue of Gen. Winfield Scott Hancock stands in the memorial park at Gettysburg Battlefield, where on November 19, 1863, President Lincoln delivered the Gettysburg Address

Rates for Children

Children under 6 receive half rate at Hulett's, Lake George, N. Y., which features an active sports program, including golf, swimming, fishing, tennis, and dancing.

But Don't Drive

Going to New York City? Take Plane, Train or Bus

By Ed Creagh

NEW YORK (AP).—Coming to New York?

Fly here, then. Or take a train or bus. But don't drive.

The streets of midtown Manhattan are torn up like the straw in the bottom of a puppy's kennel, and the odds in favor of your landing in the bottom of an excavation are at least 6 to 1.

This is the stern counsel of William J. (Boxer) Sheridan, taxi driver, Brooklyn booster, and firm believer that the city fathers are in a conspiracy to make life difficult for cabbies. Especially for Boxer.

"Look it," he sneered, waving an arm at 32d st. "Steam shovels. Rollers. Sidewalk superintendents. This is the biggest yokel town in America. Only here they don't roll up the sidewalks. They tear up the pavements."

"On Columbus Circle it's worse—if there could be such a thing. Also 51st between Broadway and 8th. To say nuttin' of 53d between Park and Madison. Traffic? Who calls it traffic any more? It's a funeral procession."

Boxer told only part of the story. New York's street-repair spree also has sections of 26th and 38th sts. in shreds and is lapping at the gutters of 72d st.

But 32d st. of song and story is the big job—$338,000 worth of resurfacing, car-track removal and traffic confusion beyond belief. It won't be over until Christmas time, either.

Only the sidewalk superintendents love it. They stand for hours, happily sniffing the fresh asphalt smell, letting the rat-tat-tat din of compressed air hammers shake their brains loose.

87 Million a Year In New England

Denver, Colo.—Vacationists in New England will spend 870 million dollars in 1949, the National Association of Travel Officials was told here today by Galo P. Emerson, manager of the New England Council's recreational development department.

This figure, an all-time high for New England vacation income, is based on expenditures through Labor Day. New England's vacation business has been running 4.2 percent ahead of 1948 business, which amounted to 836 million dollars, according to figures released by the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston.

In 1910 the Boston Chamber of Commerce estimated that vacations brought an income of 60 million dollars to the region, the council spokesman commented.

Coordination Urged For Virginia Depts.

Richmond, Nov. 12 (Spl.).—Governor Tuck today was told, in effect, that too many cooks are spoiling Virginia's governmental broth.

In his final report as chief of staff for the Reorganization of the Agencies of State Government, Charles J. Duke, jr., told the Governor that the large number of independent agencies represented in the State cabinet, interferes with "top-level coordination."

More of this coordination is needed, Duke said, to remedy "serious deficiencies in the facilities for planning and for control."

Duke recommended a small cabinet "based on broad functions, with representatives from broad areas such as education, public welfare, highways, natural resources, business regulation and staff services."

Savings Foreseen

His report surveyed briefly the seven studies which were completed as a specific part of the reorganization program and estimated annual savings of about $1,500,000 should result from them.

Among the Burch Reorganization Commission proposals which Duke said should be put into effect by legislative action were:

Merger of the Department of Labor and Industry, the Unemployment Compensation Commission and the Industrial Commission.

Consolidation of the Commission of Game and Inland Fisheries, the Commission of Fisheries and the State Water Control Board into the Department of Conservation and Development.

Inclusion of all autonomous boards (eight of the 17 were excluded by the 1948 Legislature) in the new Department of Professional and Occupational Registration. This, Duke explained, would mean a saving of about $64,000 a year.

A realignment of the functions of the Commission for the Blind; transfer of its public assistance program to the Welfare Department and direction and control of the workshop rehabilitation program and sight-saging classes to the Department of Education.

Either abolish the State Milk Commission or merge it with the Department of Agriculture.

Transfer the functions of the Dairy and Food Division of the Department of Agriculture to the Department of Health to "eliminate one of the most flagrant existing duplications in the State government."

Merger Asked

Merge the Division of Motor Vehicles (except duties relating to licensing "for-hire" vehicles and administering the motor vehicle dealer licensing law) into the Department of Taxation.

Transfer of the functions of the Division of Motor Vehicles relating to licensing "for-hire" vehicles and administering the motor vehicle dealer licensing law to the State Corporation Commission.

Transfer eye clinics from the Commission for the Blind to the Department of Health.

The Duke report failed to go along with Burch Commission recommendation to merge the mental hygiene system into the Department of Welfare and Institutions. Instead, he recommended that it be put in the Health Department.

Duke also said there are other areas in the State government which "have major potentialities for improved efficiency and economy." These, he said, should be studied by the Virginia Advisory Legislative Council or special legislative commissions.

Among such areas recommended for further exploration were:

State-use industries; housing of State agency field offices; laboratories; overhead cost of special fund agencies; administration of the public assistance program at the local level, and coordination of higher education.

Special Funds Hit

"Special funds are at best poor devices frequently breeding more waste than wisdom," Duke said. "With the possible exception of funds of a 'trust' nature such as highway funds and unemployment compensation funds, consideration should be given to their abolition, the conversion of the revenues . . . into the General Fund, and the appropriation by the General Assembly on the basis of budgetary needs . . ."

Duke's staff concurred in a Burch Commission recommendation that continuing provision be made for rendering management consulting services to the several agencies. There is "clear evidence" the report stated, that such services would be productive of savings far beyond their cost."

After receiving the report, Governor Tuck wrote Duke a letter thanking him for his services as reorganization staff chief and promising that his recommendations and suggestions will have "most careful consideration."

White House

Cornerstone May Be Laid At Sesqui

Reenactment of the 1792 White House cornerstone laying as a part of the 1950 sesquicentennial celebration now is a distinct possibility.

Sesqui Director Edward Boykin, on reading The Washington Post's story about the missing cornerstone's discovery, said he hopes to arrange for such a ceremony during the executive mansion's renovation. He was enthusiastic about the idea.

Potomac Lodge No. 5 of the Masons, chartered in 1789 as Lodge No. 9 of Georgetown, also expressed interest in taking part in such a ceremony. It was members of this lodge who officiated at the 1792 ceremony.

The lodge's librarian, R. Baker Harris, told The Post yesterday:

"We had long believed it probable that if there was a White House cornerstone ceremony in 1792, our lodge might have conducted it; since in 1792 the lodge in Georgetown was the only Masonic lodge in the area now comprising the District of Columbia. However, the earliest records of our lodge which have survived (that is, minutes or proceedings) are those for the year 1795."

These records, Harris explained, definitely show that Peter Casaneva was, in 1792, the lodge's master. The Post's story last Friday reported a 1792 newspaper account naming Casaneva as the Mason in charge of the ceremony.

California Opens Exhibit At Library

Californians gathered at the Library of Congress yesterday to open an all-encompassing exhibit to honor the adoption of the State's constitution 100 years ago today.

They heard a talk by Carl Irving Wheat, attorney and historian, about their State, grown now to more than 10 million in population of whom 3 million have come in the past decade.

Wheat suggested some California historical spots in the Washington area which he said ought to be suitably marked: Decatur House, now owned by Mrs. Truxton Beale, the daughter-in-law of Gen. Edward Fitzgerald Beale, a California pioneer.

Then there is the site of thee St. Charles Hotel on Pennsylvania ave. at Third st. nw. Here died John A. Sutter, the man who owned the famous Sacramento Valley mill where gold was discovered in 1849.

Finally, suggested Wheat, there ought to be a marker up the Potomac River at Balls Bluff, where a California battalion, made up of former gold miners, was led by Col. Edward D. Baker, Senator from Oregon.

Wheat told his audience in the Coolidge Auditorium yesterday that the Golden Bear State's first century was "a turbulent but an advancing one also." The library's exhibit is testimony to both facets.

Perhaps the prize exhibit is the original diary of President James K. Polk, opened to an entry of December 7, 1948, reading in part:

"The Secretary of War called and exhibited to me specimens of California gold, which had been sent to him, by Col. Mason, commanding the United States troops in California." Mason's assistant in running down the gold rumors was a young lieutenant named William Tecumseh Sherman.

Appealing Figure At National Fete

LOOKS LIKE a little French choir boy, and that's what he's pretending to be for the International Fete held at the Shoreham Hotel yesterday afternoon by the Women's National Farm and Garden Association. But it's really Thomas G. (Timothy) Corcoran, jr., all dressed up. Mrs. Truman was the fete's guest of honor

Foreign Yule Customs Are Shown Here

The koala bear sat on the Australian beach, cooking his plum pudding and "boiling the billy" for his Christmas dinner—all the while picking flowers in the 110 degree sunshine.

Yesterday afternoon at the International Fete of the Capital Division, Woman's National Farm and Garden Association, at the Shoreham Hotel, the stuffed koala bear performed on a table arranged as an Australian beach, the place many Australians spend Christmas because it's summertime there on December 25.

Like the other tables set up by embassies participating in the pre-Christmas fete, the Australian one reflected homeland.

In another symbol of home, a Canadian bear, made of wood, sniffed a posy as a representative of the wood carving arts.

Dolls Skate

Little dolls skated in a mirror at The Netherlands Embassy table. On the Swedish table, the orange wooden horse "dalaharst" cavorted with a straw goat, "julebocken."

The New Zealanders displayed a miniature sheep station, with a flock of snow white sheep on the green grass, and of course, one black sheep.

A tiny sheaf of wheat was hung over the Finnish table for the birds' Christmas dinner, and there was a tiny orange bird getting a preview. A geometric ornament, "a himmell," made from straws—traditionly hung over the Christmas table—was on display together with Christmas stars made of paper.

The French table was a profusion of luxuries—perfumes, laces, white gloves, jewels, glassware.

The English Christmas table was just that. A table set for Christmas dinner, gleaming with Wedgwood china, old silver and White Friars glassware. And on the buffet, behind the Royal Worcester china and the silver coffee service, a display of fresh holly sent from Mount Vernon!

Andersen Tales

Denmark's silver and china plates with Hans Christian Andersen fairy tales pictured on them were arranged before a cross-stitch sampler which told the story of the occupation in names—Gestapo, BBC, Eisenhower, Roosevelt, Stalin and the names of battles—mixed with coats of arms, swastikas, and military insignia.

The Swiss table was a tiny creche, with carved shephards coming to the manger. The Ceylon and Indian tables were crowded with metal work, fabrics and art work. Norwegian dolls danced among enamel bracelets and hand-woven table mats.

Mrs. Harry Truman attended the fete and received a corsage made especially for her by the rural garden group of the club.

Money raised through the exhibit and from sale of gifts, is used to provide scholarships for two girls every year, and to assist the Associated Country Women of the World.

U. S. Maritime Band To Give Fall Concert

The United States Maritime Service Band will give its fifth annual fall concert Monday at 8 p. m. in the Department of Commerce auditorium, on 14th st. between E st. and Constitution ave. There will be no admission charge.

Soloists will be Miss Fluerette Joffrie, a soprano who has sung with grand opera companies in California, and Miss Sandra Campbell, pianist, who has been featured with the Arlington Symphony Orchestra. The band will play selections from Wagner, Victor Herbert, Tschaikowsky and Gillette.

UAW Would Draft Lausche for Senator

Cleveland, Ohio, Nov. 12 (U.P.).—A regional meeting of the AFL United Auto Workers today started a "draft Lausche for Senator" move.

Lester Washburn, Milwaukee, president of the union, said "if Ohio's Gov. Frank Lausche will run against Senator Robert Taft, we think he can win."

Area Schools Share Annual Paper Award

Western High of Washington and Montgomery Blair High of Silver Spring tied for the Cumberland Times-News trophy in the Maryland Scholastic Press Association tournament yesterday.

The trophy is presented annually to the scholastic newspaper considered best in editorial, news, sports and feature articles. Both Western and Montgomery Blair scored 24 points.

Frederick High was second with 20 points. The others scoring were Gonzaga High of Washington; Glen Burnie High, and Douglass High of Baltimore, all 18; Baltimore City College 10; St. John's of Washington, 8; and Brunswick, Patterson Park of Baltimore and Calvin Coolidge of Washington, all 6.

Carol Grimes of Frederick's High Flyer was judged the top editorial writer. Ellen Sincoff of the Western Breeze, Western High, Washington, was best in features, and Jerry Freeman of Gonzaga High's Aquilian in Washington had the best sports story.

Baltimore Weeklies Best

Minerva Heller of Western High had the best news article.

The top weekly publications, on an over-all basis, the judge decided, were the Collegian of Baltimore City College, and the Patterson Park Press, Baltimore.

The Alcohi Mirror of Cumberland's Allegany High was best in the bi-weekly division. Second were the Kenwood High Spotlight and the Setinel of Fort Hill High of Cumberland. Third was the Tally-Ho of Annapolis.

The best monthly, with circulation over 500, was the Easterner of Eastern High, Washington. The Quill of Baltimore's Mount St. Joseph was second, and the Western Breeze of Western High, Washington, and the Window of the Institute of Notre Dame in Baltimore were tied for third.

Monthlies with circulation less than 500 were rated the Tatler of Laurel High, first; Hottentot, Cambridge, second, and the Whistle, Brunswick, third.

Awarded the trophy for the best all around yearbook was the Clarissian, of the Institute of Notre Dame, Baltimore.

Adjudged the best letter press yearbook was the Clarissian; second was the Westerners, of Western High School, Washington, and rated third was the Mount Tower, of Mount St. Joseph.

Punch and Judy of Washington's Eastern High was rated the best yearbook in the offset and lithograph field. The Greenbag, of Baltimore City College, was second and Silverlogue, of Montgomery Blair High, Silver Spring, was third.

Winner in the magazine division was Montgomery Blair.

Some 450 students and teachers attended the association meeting.

Elected president of the association was James B. Burger, 17, of Frederick high school.

Other officers named were Virginia Mulcah, Seon High, Baltimore, first vice president; Peter Tasch, Balitmore City College, second vice president; Jeanne Rainey, Hagerstown, High, recording secretary; Ted Ichniowski, Patterson Park High, Baltimore, corresponding secretary, and Margaret Dressler, Institute of Notre Dame, treasurer.

Named president of the advisory group was James C. Leonhart, of Baltimore City College. Other officers are Mrs. Lucille Mohler, Montgomery Blair, vice president; Sister Christin, Seton High, corresponding secretary; Ethel Hycles, Douglas High of Baltimore, recording secretary, and William Galbrath, Gaithersburg High, treasurer.

Midwest Truck Drivers Win Pay Hike, Benefits

Chicago, Nov. 12. (AP).—Eight Midwest truck company groups and their 40,000 over-the-road drivers in 11 States accepted terms early today of a new 26-months wage contract.

The drivers will receive two wage boosts and a health and welfare program benefits financed entirely by the employers.

The first wage boost becomes effective Nov. 16. It provides for an increase of eight cents an hour and one-fourth cent a mile for the first 14 months, and an additional five cents an hour and one-eighth cent a mile for the final twelve months.

The drivers are members of the Central States Drivers' Council, an affiliate of the AFL International Brotherhood of Teamsters. The employer groups operate in the States of Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska and Kansas.

Denfeld Row Opinions Held 'Dangerous'

Charleson, S. C., Nov. 12 (AP).—Rear Admiral Daniel V. Gallery, author of sharply worded articles in the Navy-Air Force squabble, said today it was "too dangerous to express an opinion" on the Denfeld case.

Admiral Louis E. Denfeld was fired as Naval Operations Chief October 27, two weeks after accusing the military high command of waging a campaign to strip the Navy to a mere "convoy and antisubmarine service."

Admiral Gallery revealed that Representative W. Sterling Cole (R., N. Y.) has asked the opinion of all Navy flag officers about Admiral Denfeld's testimony before the House Armed Services Committee.

Cole, reached at Elmira, N. Y., declined comment on Admiral Gallery's message but verified that he had made the request as a member of the Armed Services Committee. He said he had promised to destroy all communications he received from flag officers and keep their contents "in strict confidence."

He added he was tabulating replies, but would not have the count completed for several days. He said: "I consider it tragic that our military leaders cannot speak with frankness to Congress on military matters without fear of recrimination by some administrative authority."

The Navy said in Washington that Secretary of the Navy Matthews has told all admirals they may give Congressmen their individual ideas about Pentagon policies. But Matthews must get cobies.

Admiral Gallery, 48, a Chicago native, is commander of a six-ship task force which paid an Armistice Day visit to Charleston.

In an interview, Admiral Gallery said he had sent the following message to Representative Cole:

"Replying to your telegram asking for my views about Admiral Denfeld's testimony before Armed Services Committee, in view of events since Admiral testified consider it too dangerous to express an opinion."

D. C. Weather 'Business' to Piano Tuner

When a piano tuner talks about the Washington weather, he isn't necessarily making small talk. The weather here is good for his business.

In fact, the weather here is so good for the tuning business that most of the 15 members of the Washington division, National Association of Piano Tuners, are about two months behind in their work.

This boost for Washington weather was gleaned yesterday between rounds of close harmony coming out of a monthly meeting of the Washington group at the Hotel Hamilton.

Yesterdays session was a membership meeting of the three-year-old group, and a harmonious one.

As to the Washington weather, in the winter you have heat in your home, which dries out the piano parts, said John W. Travis, secretary-treasurer of the Washington group. Then along comes the summer, with its very high humidity, and everything starts to expand, Travis explained.

The result of this continual process? "Loose ribs, cracked sounding boards, broken strings, piano out of tune," said Travis.

That's why the piano tuners recommend calling on their services four times a year in these parts—once for each change in the seasons.

The need for more tuners of high standing, and for more members of the NAPT, was stressed by F. X. Friedel, a NAPT director, who was the guest speaker.

12th St. YMCA Plans for Mass Members' Rally

A mass membership meeting and rally of members of the 12th Street Y. M. C. A. will be held day at 8 p. m. in branch headquarters.

The rally is designed as a fall kick-off meeting to "rekindle the interest of the membership as well as the public generally in the work of the association." West A. Hamilton of the committee, said yesterday.

Principal address will be delivered by the Rev. Marshall Shepherd, recorder of deeds for the District. Rally sponsors hope to have a wide representation of Washington residents in attendance.

Girl Scout Program

Girl Scouts of Prince Georges County will present a special program from 2 to 6 p. m. today at Hyattsville Armory, including movies, folk dancing and a puppet show. Booths displaying divisions of the scout program will be open to inspection.

Alexander Gabriel To Speak on Israel

Alexander Gabriel, radio correspondent covering the United Nations, will speak to the Louis D. Brandeis Zionist District Monday on "Israel—Hub of Economic Reorganization in the Middle East."

He will discuss the United Nations Economic Survey Mission program, proposed by the general assembly, which deals largely with the Middle East. The meeting will be held at the Jewish Community Center, 16th and Q sts., nw., at 8:30 p. m.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, Nov. 12 (AP).—A late rally left wheat and soybeans with a firm tone at the close, while feed grains suffered from weekend profit-taking on the Board of Trade today. Dealings were active throughout the session, particularly on the late advance.

The market got off to a weak start, corn dropping more than a cent before meeting enough resting orders to halt the slump. The rest of the market followed corn's leadership during this early period. Some disappointment over the Government's crop report caused selling in corn.

Wheat ended unchanged to ½ higher, corn was ⅛@¾ lower, oats were unchanged to ½ lower, rye was unchanged to ½ higher, soybeans were ¾ lower to 1¼ higher and lard was unchanged to 5 cents a hundred pounds higher.

Much of the buying in wheat at the close represented short-covering. It was stimulated by a belief the contemplated barter deal between this country and India may have been terminated, although there was no official confirmation to back up such a belief.

This was the first session in which grains could show any reaction to the Agriculture Department's crop report of Thursday. The reaction was rather bearish. A decline of 119 million bushels in corn prospects was less than many had expected and an increase of 4 million bushels in soybeans prospects was a surprise.

New York Cotton

New York, Nov. 12 (AP).—Cotton futures closed 10 to 50 cents a bale lower today. Final quotations for most deliveries were at the day's lowest levels.

Most of the selling centered in March and May contracts. The pressure came through the South and was mainly described as hedging representing an accumulation of orders over the holiday.

In addition, dealers reported that there was a moderate amount of transferring from nearby December to more distant deliveries by commission houses and in preparation for first notice day on November 23.

Reports also were heard that there was a strong demand for quality cotton from mills.

Business Outlook

By J. A. Livingston

A Mild Vote for Inflation

Once again John L. Lewis has demonstrated his flair for drama. On Wednesday, by ordering his coal miners back to work—without a contract—Lewis stole some front-page space from the election sweep of the Democrats. And he overshadowed the announcement by General Motors on Monday of a record-breaking dividend to common shareholders.

Livingston

Thus, Lewis paves the way for resumption of all-out industrial production. But only for a few weeks. He retains control of the business outlook. If he doesn't wrest a contract from coal operators by December 1, presumably the miners will march out of the pits again. And presumably steel output, now rising, will fall sharply.

The off-year election can be interpreted as a mild vote for inflation. The Democratic victories suggest public support of President Truman's Fair Deal. Labor's affiliation with the Democratic Party has been reemphasized, and the Democratic Party seems now firmly fixed as the majority party in the United States.

G. M. Completes Picture

That suggests further congressional legislation to widen social security, increase unemployment compensation, provide medical assistance, extend educational aid to the States, and to raise the income of workers. The "public welfare" clause in the Constitution will be worked by the Democrats to the hilt.

President Truman can now be expected to go all out for his goal of a 300-billion-dollar national income, as against the 225-billion-dollar rate of today. That's a jump of one third. It implies a higher standard of living all along the line: More automobiles, more refrigerators, more food, more amusement.

The General Motors dividend fits nicely into this pattern. Admittedly, Alfred P. Sloan, chairman, and Charles Erwin Wilson, president, attempted to play it soft by saying it "helps to correct an inequity" to shareholders, whose dividend receipts had not kept pace with the postwar rise in wages, prices, or the economy in general. Sloan and Wilson also went on to say that earnings during the first nine months were still "benefiting from a backlog of deferred demand."

The year-end dividend of $4.25 brings the 1949 total to $8, which, after allowing for stock splitups, is the highest ever. (In 1948, the company paid $4.50, including a yearend payment of $2.) In addition, G. M. paid off, out of cash on hand, 125 million dollars of long-term notes. Apparently, the company does not need funds to continue its postwar expansion program.

Aid and Comfort for Reuther

Obviously, this is going to provide Walter Reuther, president of the United Auto Workers, with subject matter for many speeches. It will make excellent copy for the UAW magazines and newspapers. G. M. will have a

Has Terraces at Three Levels

By Conrad P. Harness

THE architect-building team which erected the $17,500 Revere house at Hollin Hills, south of Alexandria, feel they have the House of 1960.

Better Homes For Better Living

Robert C. Davenport, head of Hollin Hills, Inc., builders, and Charles M. Goodman, of Charles M. Goodman Associates architects, have a point. The three-level modern house which rambles up a hillside boasts many trends which housing experts say will be used in the house of 1960, 1975 or even 2000.

Living habits of the occupants have been studied, and the house planned around them. Rooms have been developed for dual and triple functions. The desire for open planning and orienting the house

Basic Facts on Exhibit Homes

What's It All About?

WHAT—Revere Quality Home Institute, nationally known housing group, approves one or two homes in each large city, as "good examples of modern, quality housing." Goal of the Institute is, through exhibit houses picked by them, to provide yardsticks by which buyers of homes under $20,000 can determine if they are getting sound construction and good design. The Institute definitely does not say that homes not approved by them are substandard. It merely hopes to open the public's eyes to the good housing available locally—of which these two homes are a good example.

WHERE: Revere model homes open for public inspection are at 5914 Annison rd., Alta Vista Terrace, Bethesda, Md., built by Carl M. Freeman, Inc., to sell at $14,950; Hollin Hills, 3 miles south of Alexandria, Va., off Fort Hunt rd., built by Hollin Hills, Inc., to sell for $17,500.

WHEN: Both homes open today at 10 a. m. for a month's showing. Visiting hours are from 4 to 10 p. m. weekdays; 2 to 10 p. m. Saturdays and 10 a. m. to 10 p. m. Sundays.

SPONSORS: Washington Junior Chamber of Commerce is sponsor of the Alta Vista Terrace home. Hollin Hall Playground Equipment Fund is sponsoring the Hollin Hills residence.

ADMISSION: A fee of 25c is charged at each home. All funds go to buy playground equipment at Hollin Hall School and to the Junior Chamber of Commerce's fund for welfare work among underprivileged children.

ARCHITECTS: Sweeley, Heap & Gauger of Alexandria, Va., designed the Alta Vista Terrace residence. Charles M. Goodman Associates of Washington designed the Hollin Hills home.

FURNISHINGS: By Hans Knoll, Top Recker, Glass House, Whyte Galleries, House of Fabrics.

YOU HAVE A PLEASANT SURPRISE in store when you visit the Revere Quality House at Hollin Hills. We think it's a fine example of modern design—well built and carefully planned for enjoyable living.

THE DRAPERIES are by Top Recker, and we hope their exciting colors and simple, fresh designs will give you ideas for your own home. If you would like to see more modern prints and textured weaves, come in to see Top Recker's collection. You'll find fabrics from the leading houses in contemporary design—Knoll, Laverne, Goodall and others—in a wide range of prices.

THE LARGE GLASS AREAS of modern house design serve two purposes—they "bring the outdoors in" and they save on construction costs. At first glance it may seem expensive to drape a 16-foot window, but it costs far less than building a 16-foot wall!

If the price tags on the Hollin Hills draperies seem high for your budget, Top Recker can show you less expensive fabrics to achieve the result you want. Our draperies are all custom made, but special construction methods for large windows reduce the cost.

THE BAMBOO BLINDS are worthy of special notice. Top Recker can order them to fit any window, and they are amazingly adaptable.

Revere House Decorated for Good Living

By Lucia Brown

A HOME that is decorated for good living as well as good looking . . . that's the Revere house in Hollin Hills.

"The most deadly type of twentieth century interior decoration is the kind that's beautiful to see but uncomfortable to live with," Architect Charles M. Goodman firmly believes.

His talent for avoiding the purely visual approach is reflected throughout the Hollin Hills house, for Architect Goodman had a hand in its furnishing as well as its design.

Color flows through the rooms and the furniture has graceful modern lines. Three-level construction and big windows give lovely vistas. But the whole house is planned from the very practical angle of comfort and convenience.

Early American Motif

BASIC STEP in making it thoroughly livable was the unorthodox arrangement of the rooms. Living and dining room are on the ground floor, where the homemaker can do her work and keep an eye on her youngsters playing in the yard at the same time. On the next level are the bedrooms and bathroom, and on a third level, the huge peaceful living room designed for family relaxation and recreation.

The Glass House has equipped the house principally with furniture by Knoll Associates. Colors used are all "grayed" tones, with brighter shades used only as accent. To take the house room by room:

The living room, with its detached, red-brick chimney, has a few pieces of simple, early American furniture mixed in with modern Knoll furniture, made in Sweden and America.

Furniture is in natural birch and walnut, walls umber gray, with gray shag rugs. Furniture is brown, rust and green. One entire wall is covered with interesting gray shelves lined in white. These walls are almost entirely windows, draped in a red-and-white apple print and white Canton.

The master bedroom has two umber gray walls, two of citron, and a pale gray ceiling. Draperies are white and gray, in a design by the famous Swedish architect, Markelius. A second bedroom has a red ceiling, two walls of gray and two of muted plum color.

The third bedroom, designed for the boys in the family, has built-in bunk beds, desk and storage shelves that hang from the wall, a citron ceiling and gray walls.

The dining room and kitchen on the ground floor will attract much interest. The floor is of slate and there is a brick chimney and fireplace set at an angle in the dining room. Furniture is by the Japanese-American designer, Naka Shima.

Dividing this room from the kitchen is a breakfast table with overhead shelves painted a coral tone. Walls in the kitchen are black, emphasizing the white enamel range and other equipment. Outside is a lovely dining terrace, seen through the wide picture windows.

Modern paintings from the Whyte Galleries, all by local artists, are used throughout the house.

Sweden, Finland, China, U. S. Helped Furnish Revere House

AMERICAN and foreign craftsmanship are equally divided in the furnishings of the Revere house in Alta Vista Terrace, Bethesda, Md.

Furniture is for the most part by the famous Alvar Aalto and imported from Finland. Aalto designed the Finnish Pavilion at the New York World's Fair, accumulating much American prestige. The Glass House has used his lovely natural birch and walnut furniture in this modern California-style home.

On the other hand, many of the houses are by Potters of Wall Street, an American firm, and the paintings are by Dorothy Hoyt, a New York artist.

China is in the Passion Flower pattern, a green and white design made by Winfield in California, while the glass is Carole made by Kosta in Sweden. Flatware is of stainless steel imported from Denmark by the Glass House.

Colors used are thoroughly modern and in accord with the fine contemporary craftsmanship of the furnishings. The charcoal walls in the living room accentuate the natural birch of the furniture, the rust and lime of the upholstery. Lightening the room is a big white shag rug in front of the impressive fireplace. The latter centers a paneled fir wall finished in a distinctive gray wax stain.

Living room draperies, from the House of Fabrics, are in a line design of gray, lime and lipstick. They are traverse style and when drawn, cover an entire window wall.

The Turchin all-glass dining table is American made and one of the most unique pieces of furniture in the house. It is in the dining alcove adjoining the living room, used with black lacquer Aalto chairs. Even the legs of this handsome table are of plate glass. The sideboard in the dining alcove is custom-made, with a case in black lacquer and the three sliding doors of sand-blasted plywood.

The two larger bedrooms are decorated in pink and red shades, mixed adroitly with white and light beige. The master bedroom has muted coral walls and a corduroy bedspread in deeper coral. Lamps and other accessories are principally in black and white.

Another bedroom has one maroon wall and three of pale pink, with a white spread bordered by a maroon-and-white-striped flounce.

The third bedroom in the house can be used as a study, too, with its gray walls, sage green couch cover, and valance and pillows in a yellow Kentucky horse print. The Aalto desk here is interesting, being formed of a table and a rolling unit of three drawers.

Model Home Kitchens Carefully Planned

The truly modern kitchen is as carefully planned and arranged as any other room in the house—if not more so!

The Kitchen Center planned the one in the Alta Vista house. This firm, owned by M. Miller, specializes in equipping new kitchens throughout, as well as in remodeling work.

Mid-Atlantic Appliances equipped the kitchen in the Hollin Hills Revere house, supplying Mid-West cabinets and Bendix equipment, as well as a Tappan gas range and General Electric refrigerator.

Alta Vista Building Up Very Fast

By James Graham

THE ALTA VISTA TERRACE section of Montgomery County, together with neighboring communities, has developed so rapidly in the past two years that population growth has outstripped community services.

Within an area of slightly less than 10 square miles lying between Rockville pike and Bradley Hills Grove, on the east and west, and Greentree rd. and Lux Manor on the south and north some 235 homes have been built since 1947.

Another 150, according to estimates of the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission building inspector's office, are now under construction.

4500 Persons by 1958

THE population increase is expected to continue rather than level off. Proposed expansion of the National Institute of Health will bring from 1500 to 2700 new workers to the Institute, located on Rockville pike at Cedar line, by 1953, officials there estimate. By 1958 the figure will reach 4500.

Approximately 80 percent of these new workers are expected to settle in the surrounding area.

The large number of area residents traveling daily to the Institute of Health and the Naval Medical Center, just across Rockville pike, point up the serious need for lateral roads. At present Cedar lane, extending from Old Georgetown rd. to Rockville pike, is the only access road from Alta Vista.

Extension of Greentree rd. across the lower part of the Institute grounds to Rockville pike is recommended by officials of Montgomery County and the Park and Planning Commission. Greentree rd., over which traffic flows from north and west, now ends at Old Georgetown rd., ¼ mile south of Cedar lane.

Both Revere Quality Homes were furnished by THE GLASS HOUSE. Choice of a single firm by both builders is probably the best demonstration of the type of good modern furniture and accessories we carry.

At our new store you will find the modern furniture of Hans Knoll (and his fabrics, too), the Aalto and Turchin products, some fine lamps and accessories. In the china and glass field THE GLASS HOUSE is proud to have the stoneware of Edith Heath, the new all-white porcelain from Western Germany, and many other good modern patterns. There are eighteen plain modern stemware patterns, primarily Swedish and Finnish.

Background Of Builders

ROBERT C. DAVENPORT
. . . started as co-op member

BOB DAVENPORT, president of Hollin Hills, Inc., got into the building game through what he calls the "back door." Back in 1939-40, he and his wife were members of a tenant group at Buckingham, large Arlington garden apartment project, that decided to build homes for members.

He was a key figure in the co-op's development of Tauxemont, about 2 miles down Fort Hunt rd. from Hollin Hills. There, the co-op built 20 rambler-type cinder-block homes for members on one-half acre lots. It was a very successful operation.

It was so successful, in fact, that prospective home owners flocked to the project and wanted the co-op to build more homes. But the co-op's mission was accomplished and it was out of the building business.

Davenport, Ralph G. Conklin and three others formed a building firm and erected 28 more homes in Tauxemont in 1940. Operations were suspended during the war.

Fifty-five homes were built in 1947. Davenport quit his job at the Department of Agriculture, where he had 13 years service. Hollin Hills, Inc., is successor to the group that built the later additions to Tauxemont.

Hollin Hills now has two styles —a "big" house at $17,250 and "little" house at $12,000. Both have three bedrooms, however, and are designed by Charles M. Goodman, outstanding local architect. Nearly all Hollin Hills homes have been financed through Walker & Dunlop, Inc.

Under way at Hollin Hills are 15 "big" homes, similar to the Revere model home, and 32 of the smaller units.

CARL M. FREEMAN
. . . radiant heating pioneer

CARL M. FREEMAN, 38-year-old head of Carl M. Freeman, Inc., has pioneered here since 1945 for champagne houses at beer incomes.

He was one of the first builders in the East to use radiant heating in a large home project. Even now, this modern type of heating is still used nearly exclusively in custom-built, more expensive homes.

He started in the building game out West as a divisional sales manager with Fritz Burns, famed California builder. He stayed with Burns for six years, until Uncle Sam beckoned in 1941. He spent the next four years in the Army Corps of Engineers, with service in the China-Burma-India theater.

On release from active service, he brought his family to Washington, purchased land, and formed his building firm. Seventy-five "California Cottages" were built in 1946-47 in Carole Highlands, off New Hampshire ave. extended, selling for $12,500 to $13,500.

This was the first project locally to feature radiant heating, floor-to-ceiling glass walls, open planning, etc., in the same house. Similar homes were erected in New Hampshire Estates in 1948 and 1949.

Currently under way is a project of 55 two-bedroom, radiant heated houses in Hampshire Hills, off New Hampshire ave. extended, near the Naval Ordnance Laboratory. Sales demand was heavy at $10,250.

Never one to hide his light under a bushel, Freeman has campaigned vigorously for modern design in houses. Such magazines as American Home, Architectural Forum and Practical Builder have written up his housing exploits.

He predicts that a house built today without radiant heating and other trademarks of what he calls the "twentieth century house," will be obsolete within 10 years, with a lowered resale value.

"Housing is somewhat like the auto industry. Buy a car today that doesn't have an automatic shift and five years from now its resale value will be far below a similar 1949 car with the new transmission."

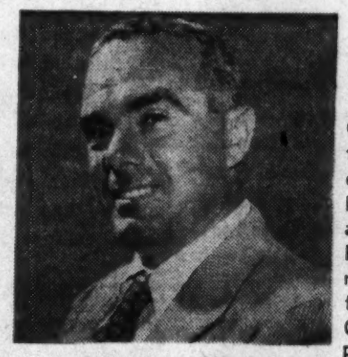
OUT OF THE WEST CAME A NEW WAY OF LIVING

For decades, while America astounded the world with its miracles of scientific progress and the American standards of living rose steadily, homes followed a traditional pattern of design.

Coming here from California, Carl M. Freeman was the first builder in this area to offer a large development of homes of contemporary design to fit the pattern of modern living.

MODERN HOMES FOR MODERN LIVING

Carl M. Freeman was determined that he would not merely build homes to sell, but would also introduce to the Washington area a design for contemporary living. His first consideration was to build attractive, well-planned homes—keyed to Twentieth Century habits and standards of comfort and convenience with features associated heretofore only with custom-built residences.



CARL M. FREEMAN

INSTANT PUBLIC ACCLAIM

Carl M. Freeman's idea found instant public favor! Overnight, the California Cottage became famous, sought by many more home-buyers than could be accommodated. Encouraged by this immediate acceptance, Carl M. Freeman set about to build a more spacious, more luxurious, three-bedroom version of California's modern-design homes. The result: The Country Club Home, selected by the Southwest Research Institute as a Revere Quality House.

CROWNING ACHIEVEMENT OF AN AMAZING CAREER

In all America, only twenty-five home builders have been so honored. Carl M. Freeman's Country Club Home meets all the standards of quality and design set forth by the Southwest Research Institute, Revere Quality House Division, a non-profit public-service organization devoted entirely to the improvement and development of moderate-priced homes.

to the lot has been fully recognized.

The area outside the ground floor has a large front and side patio, with checkerboard patio floors of concrete squares into which lampblack was mixed, giving black cement finish.

Unique Breakfast Bar

THE first level, or ground floor, has a very large, well-equipped kitchen-laundry which is separated from a large "all-purpose room" by a kitchen bar which seats six persons comfortably.

Walls of the "all purpose-room" are of brick, and knotty pine, with large glass window-walls overlooking the two terrace-patios. There is a fireplace, also. Flooring in the novel room is of slate squares. The heating plant and other utility fixtures are shut off from peering eyes in a utility closet, with a door of knotty pine, which blends in the wall so perfectly that one is unaware a door is there.

A stairway of gleaming knotty pine leads to the second-floor level—with three bedrooms and a novel bath. The hallway is lined with storage closets, from floor to ceiling. All are Milo cabinets, with metal sliding doors.

The tile bath has a tub on the left as you enter, with a complete floor-to-ceiling tile partition separating bath and toilet. On the right is a clever arrangement seldom seen in these parts: The sink has been built into a work counter, just like a kitchen sink. Above the sink is the mirror, with invisible lighting. At right and left, above and below the Formica work counter are built-in cabinets. No lack of storage space in this room!

From the bedroom or "sleeping" area you walk up a short flight of stairs to the large living room-study. There is a large brick "free-standing" fireplace — which means the fireplace is out from the wall. It helps to separate the living room from a potential study nook.

Terrace at Rear

ARCHITECT Goodman has made extensive use of floor-to-ceiling window walls, with such walls taking up most of three sides of the living room. The fourth wall has been designed as a storage wall, with cabinets below and bookcase shelving above.

Two entrances from the rear living room wall open onto a third terrace. The entire residence has been skillfully landscaped by Bernard Voigt, landscape architect. Hundreds of dollars were spent in shrubbery and flowers.

Davenport said most homes are being financed through Walker & Dunlop, Inc., Washington mortgage brokers. A $17,250 sales price has been approved by the Veterans' Administration, he declared. Negotiations with the local FHA insuring office are still under way, it was said, although Hollin Hills, Inc., has been trying for over 10 months to get a reasonable appraisal from the FHA for mortgage insurance purposes. Under present financing plans, qualified veterans would probably have to put up around $2500 to $3000 to purchase a Revere house at Hollin Hills, Davenport added.

House of Fabrics Furnished Draperies

The House of Fabrics, which provided draperies and spreads for the Revere house in Alta Vista, is run by a husband-wife team.

They are Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Fischer and their main store is located in Georgetown, with branches on Park rd. and L st. nw. As Donna Manor Smith, Mrs. Fischer started the firm four years ago, and her husband recently became her business partner.

The main store offers a decorating service—free advice and assistance whether you're buying only one pair of draperies or equipping an entire house.

Builder (who gives veterans preference): Carl M. Freeman, Carl M. Freeman Incorporated, 1013 15th St., N.W., Washington, D. C.

WATER SYSTEM—Hot and cold water lines of Revere Copper Water Tube are a fine feature of this house. This long-lasting tube has many economy features. Lengths are joined either by solder or compression fittings, and thus extra heavy wall thickness required merely for threading is unnecessary. This represents an economy in metal costs. This tube is also used for radiant panel heating in this house and thousands of others from coast to coast.

OTHER APPLICATIONS — There are many uses for fine Revere Metal throughout houses designed and built to provide quality homes. Revere Sheet Copper is used to seal the vital joints around chimneys, in valleys, over doors and windows. Solid brass hardware, plumbing fixtures, switch plates, convenience outlets are a sign of quality, as is bronze weather stripping around doors and windows. Remember, copper cannot rust, and the damage done by just one leak always costs more than Revere Metals.

NOW Washington throws a new light upon housing through the Revere Quality Houses in Bethesda. Here we have an outstanding demonstration of the fact that today it is possible to obtain outstanding values in everything that makes a house a fine home, without paying too much. These houses are priced in the $15,000-$18,000 range. We suggest that everybody see them who can do so.

SEE the exhibition house, one of ten, each with three bedrooms, but in two different sizes, 1168 and 1458 square feet. Right and left variations give variety to the vista along the street. Both sizes have an entry, living room with fireplace, dining alcove, kitchen, breakfast room, heater room, three bedrooms, bath and storage. The larger house also has a powder room off the entry.

SEE the excellent storage space, an outstanding feature. In addition to large closets downstairs, the 12 x 34-foot attic can be used for storage. It is accessible by a disappearing stair. Not only that, there is a large space off the terrace for bulky outdoor items, such as garden tools, summer furniture, baby carriages, bicycles. This storage space also serves as a terrace screen to give privacy to outdoor living and dining, so desirable and pleasant in and around Washington.

THESE are very livable houses. "The principa room was designed," says Robison Heap, the architect, "to function as both a living and dining area with expansion of both areas during six months of the year to the garden terrace at the rear. The room is large, its greatest dimensions being 20 feet by 20 feet 3 inches. It is L-shaped to permit the placement of the dining area in an alcove, which shares with the living area a full and unobstructed view of, and direct access to, the terrace and garden. The entire south wall of the living-dining area, over 20 feet long, is a window-wall, glassed from the ceiling to within 20 inches of the floor, establishing an intimate union between indoors and outdoors."

REVERE COPPER, the enduring, rustless metal, is among the many quality materials used in building these houses. It is used for flashing which seals the vital joints against leaks. Hot and cold water lines are all Revere Copper Water Tube, which is also used for the radiant panel heating installation in the floor. This tube costs little or no more, installed, than rustable pipe, and it is a feature of high quality that adds to the value of any home.

SPONSORS — This exhibition of Revere Quality Houses is sponsored by the Washington Junior Chamber of Commerce, and by the Washington Metropolitan Home Builders' Association.

HOW TO GET THERE — Go out the old Georgetown Road about two miles to Beech Drive, thence left three blocks to Annison Road, thence right to the exhibition. Hollin Hills Area Sets Fast Building Pace

By Robert P. Jordan

NEW ALEXANDRIA lies 1½ miles southwest of Alexandria off Mount Vernon blvd.—a pleasant little community of 94 homes huddled on the Potomac flats in Fairfax County.

"We came down here to find room for our children," says Warren L. Granger, president of the citizens' association.

Granger's observations of life in New Alexandria pretty well fit other, more recent real estate developments farther south, completed or underway. The terrain along Mount Vernon blvd. and Fort Hunt rd. to within a short distance of Washington's home is rapidly becoming dotted with homes.

Eugene J. Olmi, who is helping build the huge Belle View Apartment project next door to New Alexandria, says there are some 26,000 persons living in the area now.

Nine years ago, he estimates about 12,000 resided there.

The influx has resulted in development—besides New Alexandria and Belle View—of Marlin Forest, Hollin Hills, Wellington Heights, Tauxemont, Hollin Hall Village and smaller projects. Too, building is about to resume in Belle Haven.

And a week from Monday, ground will be broken for a 17-acre shopping center near the Belle View Apartments. It will open March 15, Olmi reports. Eventually, 48 stores will cater to family needs in the area.

This shopping center and another planned at Hollin Hall Village are the only large commercial zonings. Nor are any commercial zoning applications pending, according to the Fairfax County Planning Commission.

The idea is to keep things residential, say Granger and various developers.

For some notion of how fast the Belle View Apartment project is shaping up, consider that 810 units of the 1540 scheduled have been built since July, 1947, housing 3200 persons. When completed in 1952, Belle View will have 6000 residents.

Belle View, like Belle Haven—that beautiful development resting in the rolling hills above New Alexandria—has its own sanitary system.

For a new development just springing up, take a look at Hollin Hills. Located off Fort Hunt rd., this 225-acre project now has 25 of an eventual 350 homes under construction. Lots cost from $2000 to $2200. Houses—three-bedroom, frame and brick—list at $10,000 and $14,800.

Each house will have its own sanitary unit. Water will be drawn from three or four community wells, one of which is now in operation.

Homes are set in rolling, wooded terrain. The view? Twenty-five miles, reports the developer. A man making $5000 a year can swing the $10,000 house, plus its $2000 lot. He should be making in excess of $6000 to handle the $14,800 house, with its $2200 lot.

A little farther along in its development is Hollin Hall Village, located about 2 miles south of Hollin Hills off Fort Hunt rd. Begun two years ago, it now has some 65 houses erected.

To the north a short distance is Tauxemont, a community of 104 homes completed last spring. Most homes are brick or cinder block, with three bedrooms.

Many homes built or to be built off Fort Hunt rd. afford a fine view of the Potomac. Others nestle on hillsides, surrounded by trees, peaceful in a woodland setting.

Generally, lots range in size from one-fourth to one-half acre. Fairfax County tax rate on property is $3.19 per $100 assessed valuation.

Developers construct road nets through the projects. Access to Alexandria and Washington is by Fort Hunt rd. to U. S. Route 1 or Mount Vernon blvd.

According to T. J. Stockton, director of county planning, and Herbert F. Schumann, planning engineer, Belleview blvd. eventually will be extended through the Belle View Apartment project southwest to Route 1.

CHARLES M. GOODMAN
. . . Hollin Hills Designer

Another road ultimately is to be built through the Hollin Hills subdivision northwest to Route 1, they announced.

School-wise, residents of this area are in the same plight as the remainder of Fairfax County. All schools are overcrowded—Mount Vernon High School, Woodlawn Elementary at Engleside, Groveton Elementary, and others.

School officials say a 12-classroom school is needed to serve Belle View and Belle Haven, and that additions are necessary to the high school and to the new four-room elementary school just opened at Hollin Hall Village.

New Roads, Schools Planned in Alta Vista Terrace

THE Park and Planning Commission also is planning toward construction of Little Falls pkwy. to run from Bradley Hills into the proposed George Washington Memorial pkwy. to speed up traffic from this section to downtown Washington. The long-discussed Northwest Freeway to relieve traffic on Route 240 (Rockville pike) into the city would pass, according to present plans, just to the west of the section.

The only school in the section, the Alta Vista Elementary School, is now operating on a shift basis. Built to accommodate 245 pupils, it had a pupil count of 294 on September 30.

An addition, to be ready for use by February, will relieve congestion "for another year," according to Assistant Superintendent of Schools Richard E. Carpenter. The school is located on Greentree rd. off Old Georgetown rd.

An addition to the Bradley School, south of Greentree rd. on Hartsdale rd., will be built next year, Carpenter said. Planned, but not yet placed on a building schedule, are another elementary school and a junior high school, he said. The site for the junior school has been obtained.

The main north and south arteries serving the section are heavily traveled Rockville pike, Route 240, over which through cross-country traffic from the west flows into Washington, and Old Georgetown rd. The latter forks from Route 240 just north of Lux Manor and rejoins it at Bethesda, merging into Wisconsin ave.

Nearest shopping facilities to this purely residential section are found in nearby Bethesda, where services of virtually every nature are offered. In addition to local mercantile establishments, Washington concerns are rapidly expanding into Bethesda with branch stores.

Revere Home in Bethesda Has Radiant Heating, Wide Window Area

built by Freeman in years past—but with several new features added.

The model house at 5914 Anniston rd., Alta Vista Terrace subdivision, is called the "Country Club" model by Freeman. The basic house was planned for the family which makes $100 per week or more and sells for $14,950. The actual model house, with several extras, will cost a little more.

Efficient Heating System

IT IS of brick, with large glass areas on three sides, has three bedrooms, large combination living-dining room, tile bath, equipped kitchen and breakfast nook.

It is built on an insulated concrete slab formation, with copper piping embedded in the concrete to provide radiant heating. There are individual controls in the utility room for each room. Thus, temperature in the living room could be 72, with 65 in the bedrooms.

Since it has no basement, extra thought has been given to the storage problem. Each bedroom has deep, built-in closet-cabinet units with sliding doors. A pull-down stairway leads to attic storage.

At the right rear corner of the house, and built of brick as an integral part of the house, is what Freeman calls his "garden cabana." This is a separate brick storage room for lawn tools, outdoor furniture and other large and bulky items.

The "garden cabana" also serves as a barrier from neighboring eyes, as it forms a protective corner in which has been made an attractive outdoor patio.

Good Kitchen View

THE Revere house has approximately 250 square feet of glass window area. The rear wall of the combination living-dining room is nearly all glass, overlooks the outdoor terrace and gives the illusion of bringing the outdoors inside.

Windows in the three bedrooms have been installed high, at eye level, for privacy and ease of furniture placement. A gallery of windows lights up the kitchen-breakfast nook-dining room area.

The kitchen location will interest the women. It is placed along the right side of the house, as you look toward the street, between the breakfast nook and dining ell. Mom can easily observe the front, side and back yards at the same time. Small fry will be under close scrutiny at all times.

The low roof lines are enhanced by a wide overhang of the eaves. This keeps out the high summer sun, lets in the low winter sun. The overhang also protects the front entranceway. "Breathing spaces" in the overhang allow air circulation in the attic, helps reduce hot air pockets during hot weather.

Freeman homes in Alta Vista Terrace are financed through the First Federal Savings & Loan Association, of Washington. The house has been approved by the local VA loan guarantee office for the $14,950 sales price. It was estimated that qualified veterans would need from $1500 to $2500 to purchase a similar house.

For a Good Cause

THE builders have 15 "Revere" type homes under way. Plans call for construction of 75 similar homes in the immediate Alta Vista Terrace area. A larger home, with similar architectural design, sells for $17,500.

Local sponsorship of the Bethesda residence is by the Washington Junior Chamber of Commerce, under leadership of Paul Matthews, president. An admission fee of 25 cents will be charged, with funds to be spent on the chamber's youth welfare fund. Children under 16, will be admitted free when accompanied by adults.

Visiting hours are from 4 to 10 p. m. on weekdays, 2 to 10 p. m. on Saturdays, and 10 a. m. to 10 p. m. on Sundays. It will be open through December 11.

Good Taste, Medium Prices

MAKING good modern glass, china, furniture and fabrics available at a medium price is the aim of the Glass House, 1642 Connecticut ave. nw.

This store, which furnished the two Revere homes now on display, was founded only a little over a year ago. It was first opened by Robert Allen in May, 1948, in the uptown shopping section, moved further down Connecticut ave. this summer.

A graduate in merchandising from the University of Illinois, Allen served in Washington with the Army during the war, felt that the opportunities for a shop such as the Glass House were good here.

In its new location, the attractive shop has two floors, arranged balcony style. An octagonal room for crystal on the balcony is a distinctive feature, while other displays include Knoll and Aalto furniture, Knoll fabrics and modern china and glass by famous makers.

WHAT ARE they talking about? The photographer didn't know when he snapped this candid photo of two of the world's most distinguished women chatting after a recent United Nations session at Lake Success, L. I.

The topic might well have been "One World." Mrs. Vijaya Pandit, India's ambassador to the U. S., was once a U.N. delegate. Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt is now U. S. delegate to the United Nations General Assembly.

World affairs aside, however, American women will note the contrast in hairdos. Madame Pandit favors precision waves, Mrs. Roosevelt the close-cropped permanent.

JACK DEMPSEY: He lowered the quotations on Bonds

The Turning Point...

A KID FIGHTER named Jack Dempsey sat fidgeting in his corner one night in 1915. Across the ring, Joe Bonds cockily bounced up and down.

To the wiseacres in the $8 seats around the smoky Ely, Nev., ring, Bonds was a heavy favorite. He had just returned from Australia; there, managed by the successful Jack Kearns, he had cleaned up. Kearns was no longer his manager, but the gamblers didn't think it would make any difference.

The gamblers were wrong. Heavy-punching Dempsey took advantage of Bonds' cockiness, won a 10-round decision. For Dempsey, the victory was a big boost because it meant matches with top heavyweights. He didn't know it, but it was also his turning point.

Too Far Too Fast?

At first it seemed too much of a boost. For Dempsey's managers pushed him into the ring against more experienced men. One of them, Jim Flynn, promptly knocked him out in the first round.

To Dempsey, it seeemed the k.o. had made him a has-been at 21. Suddenly discouraged, Jack drifted to the West Coast, there fought Al Norton.

One day manager Jack Kearns, who remembered the Bonds fight, leafed through a San Francisco paper, stopped at the boxing results. Jack Dempsey, he read, had knocked out Al Norton in the first round. Kearns, recalling the Bonds fight, wasn't surprised.

Kearns made a decision. He wrote to Jack: "I'd like to manage you. If you're willing, meet me in Oakland."

Dempsey wrote back: "O.K., but send me train fare."

That was the last time the boy from Salt Lake City needed an advance. In 1919 he became champion, stayed there seven years. Few fighters have been as popular—or have held popularity so long.

"Now I Can See!"

Carl Klein went to bed a blind man. When he awoke a miracle had happened. Here's his story

By DONALD WAYNE and SID ROSS

SOME WEEKS AGO newspapers throughout the U.S. reported the astonishing experience of a blind man who regained his sight when doctors said he couldn't. It was a strangely heartening tale, and PARADE set out to discover all the facts. Here they are, comprising the wonderful and strangely beautiful story of Carl Klein.—Ed.

BLIND PEOPLE sometimes have nightmares that they can see. That was what Carl A. Klein thought was happening to him last January 16th in a Brooklyn furnished room.

Carl had gone to bed a blind man. He woke up suddenly in the dark with a splitting headache. His Braille watch told him the time: 1:30 a.m.

"I had the feeling that someone had hit me over the head with a baseball bat," Carl says, recalling the miraculous experience, "because I was seeing millions of little bright dots. The dots grew into circles, and as they grew wider, I realized that I was actually seeing light coming into the window from the street."

Klein sat hardly daring to move on the edge of the bed till dawn. When morning waxed before his shocked eyes he knew they were no longer sightless, that suddenly and miraculously – and contrary to the doom pronounced for years by doctors–he wasn't blind any more. He could see again!

That was ten months ago. To any blind man regained sight means a new lease on life, and that's what it has meant to Carl Klein. But adjusting from a world of unbroken darkness to a bright world of movement and color has proved a gradual, cautious process. Klein lives in both worlds.

His reawakened eyes found the visual world confusing, erratic and beautiful.

When Klein saw what traffic was like he became terrified. Not only crossing streets but climbing stairs and in crowds he frequently closes his eyes to get around more happily and safely.

He Must Look Carefully

Klein still isn't quite used to seeing. "Sometimes, when I look at a thing I can see it," he explains, "but I must study it for a few seconds before I realize what it really is." When reading a book or newspaper he has to dwell the same way on the printed words.

Klein still does a good deal of his reading and writing in Braille, not only out of habit but because he "favors" his eyes as much as he can. He has a natural, morbid fear of going blind again.

His vision actually rates better than average: 20-20, or normal, in one eye, 20-40 in the other, which isn't bad. He wears glasses now for correcting astigmatism. His eyes are extra sensitive to glare.

With his new sight–his is one of the few instances in medical history in which vision has come back without surgery–Klein has noticed surprising changes in cars and clothes, especially women's hats, but he doesn't like the fast movement of city life. He found he had become acutely aware of city dirt. The tragedy of his blindness was accentuated by the fact that Klein was a landscape gardener and nature lover when he lost his sight. Now a walk in the park is enough to repay him those sightless years. Klein exults in seeing birds on the wing, children playing, the rich colors of flowers, the changing of the seasons.

"Sometimes," he says, "I just stop and look at a tree. An ordinary tree. I pull off a twig and examine the leaves. You wouldn't understand it, and I just can't tell you what a thrill it is to examine veins in a leaf, or a piece of bark. Even a blade of grass gives me a thrill." Klein tried country life last spring, doing landscape work for six weeks in May and June at Vergennes, Vermont, but the dazzling sunlight shining off Lake Champlain hurt his eyes. He returned to the city, and for a while was a maintenance worker at a Brooklyn Hospital. His eyes stronger now and protected by dark glasses, Klein is all geared for another try at employment – anywhere, anything, but hopefully out of doors.

CARL KLEIN: A LEAF'S VEINS ENCHANT HIM

Now that he can use his eyes again, Klein finds great excitement, he says, in all growing things, even in blades of grass.

He Became Landscape Gardener

Klein, 41, was born in New Haven, Conn., and raised in an orphanage. After a short sting as a cafeteria bus boy and short order cook he went right into landscape gardening. Klein worked up a prosperous business for himself until in 1943 his eyes suddenly went bad.

"I had to have three pairs of glasses within six months," Klein recalls about the catastrophe. Doctors told him his case was hopeless, a wasting of the optic nerve that could only mean permanent blindness. By 1944 Klein was able to tell light and darkness, and from 1946 on he was blind.

When Klein's sight jumped back last January doctors had a ready explanation. They speculate that a blood clot constricting muscles of the skull was released and absorbed when Klein's chronic state of tension relaxed. As good a theory as any, Klein supposes. He had plenty of worries, chiefly anxiety over the war, he thinks, that might have made him go blind.

If the doctors are right, Klein owes his recovery to the calm environment of the Brooklyn Industrial Home for the Blind. That was where he was able to relax.

Resigned to permanent blindness, Klein moved to Brooklyn to be near the Home, where he learned Braille and cane technique. He took up handicrafts like knitting and weaving by which blind people make a living. Klein made mops, brooms, rugs, mats.

But the Home gave him something extra. Klein knew an unusual sense of happiness and security, of warm fraternity with the others. "I lost all my worries," he says. "I relaxed completely. I regained my confidence that I could make my way in life."

Acutely conscious of color, Klein chooses a necktie.

The morning Klein got his sight back he took one look at the stairs of his rooming house, shut his eyes and went down with his tapping cane. It was a lot easier. Now after 10 months such problems have nearly vanished. While Klein behaves like a normal man with a pair of eyes, he sometimes reverts to his blind habits. He rests his eyes the movies, where he still listens the way he did when he was blind. Klein claims he enjoys the story better with his eyes shut.

Klein had to get used to faces, not only the faces of his friends, but his own face. He found that people he had met when he was blind usually looked like he had imagined them to be. Klein still identifies some people by characteristic coughs and shuffles.

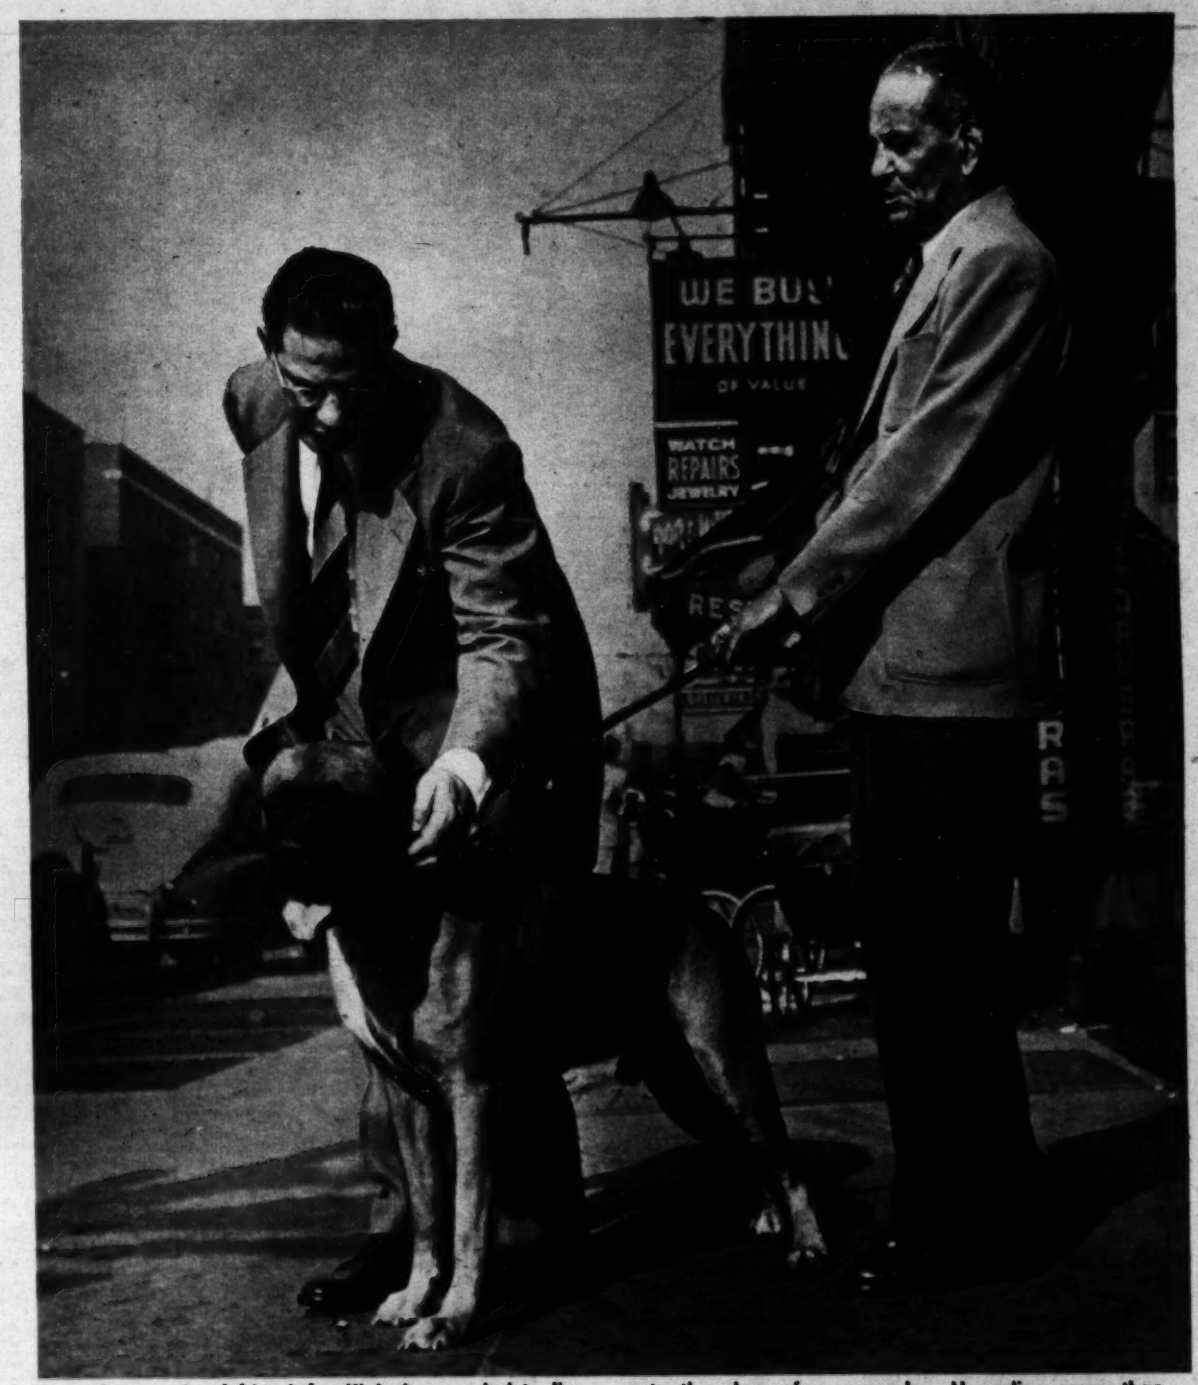
He Sees Himself

Not until the day after his sight returned did Klein work up the courage to look in a mirror. That was his second shock. He looked different, older, than his mental picture of himself. Now he's used to his face and guesses it isn't too bad.

Although Klein was always a neat dresser, "I'm a lot fussier now," he says. But he had to learn to shave again. "When I was blind I was the fastest man in the world shaving myself," he says, "and I never cut myself. When my sight came back I cut myself all up. I still do if I don't watch."

Sometimes he finds it confusing to hear so well and see at the same time. "I'm still learning how to use my eyes," he says.

All the time he keeps thinking: a man who went blind once might conceivably go blind again. But he refuses to worry about it. He is going ahead with his plans, which include (1) re-development of his landscape gardening, and (2) getting married sometime soon. Klein isn't talking, but he's got the girl all picked out.



Since he regained his sight, Klein has tended to live half in, half out of the world of the blind. Here he pats the dog of a passerby. He relies more than other people on his senses of feeling and hearing.

Always neat, Klein is ultra-careful of his clothes and of buttonhole flowers. Color fascinates him.

Simple sights—like children playing—grip Klein's imagination as never before. He has always loved outdoors.

He continues to write Braille just as in the days of his blindness, keeps the delicate touch he developed then.

FROM THE THOUSAND WINDOW BAKERIES OF

The Joke's on You, Officer!

The man who tickets your car makes some odd mistakes, but he has the last laugh

By ERNEST LA FRANCE

EXCEPT FOR BASEBALL UMPIRES, congressmen, dizzy blondes, absent-minded professors, mothers-in-law, professional wrestlers, and slow race horses, the most vilified individuals in America are undoubtedly our traffic cops. They have the onerous job of keeping us from using the public streets as open-air garages or race tracks, or as obstacle courses on which we can crease the careless pedestrian with our unpaid-for jalopies.

This year, there are signs that the man with the whistle and the book of tickets is at last cracking up, or at least getting in a class with Abbott & Costello. It is an open question whether violators belong in jail or the traffic cops belong in vaudeville.

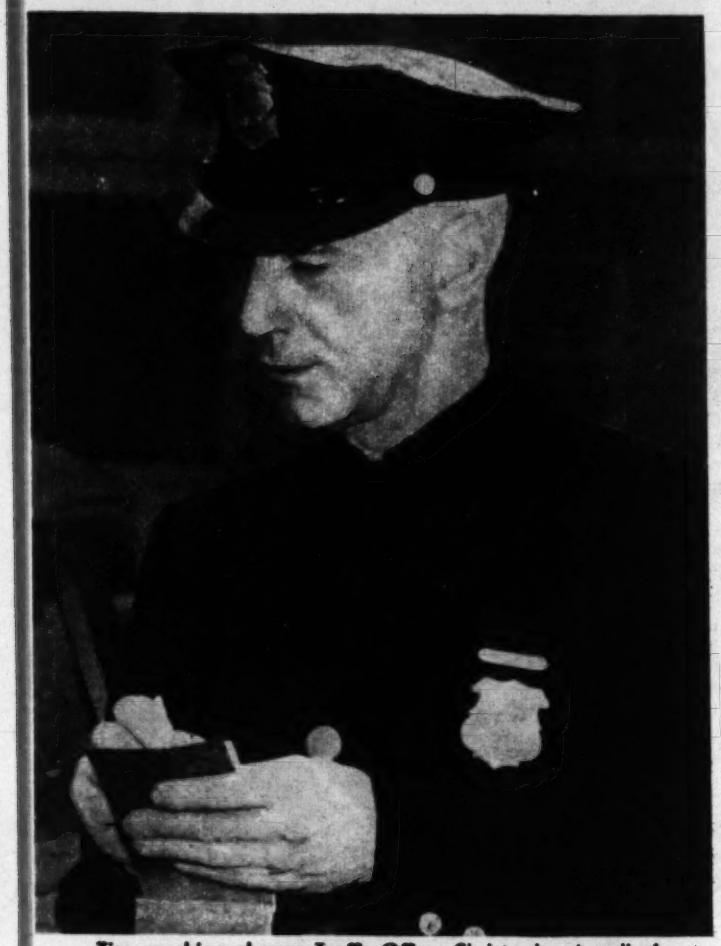
Exhibit A (right) : champion parking ticketer Officer Christopher Aspall, of Springfield, Mass., who had given out 123,000 tickets at the average rate of 119 a day ever since 1945, disclosed how he ticketed so many cars that the city had to hire an extra judge to take care of the fines. He whittled himself a chalk-tipped stick so he could mark tires on the run, without even stopping to stoop.

Not all of the coppers were so studious. Take Exhibit B, Patrolman Harold Grossnickle, of Des Moines, Ia., who spent seven days writing out parking tickets ordering offenders to be in court on Sept. 31, but remembered too late that there were only thirty days in September. As a reward, gleeful offenders forwarded him calendars from four neighboring states and Canada.

Exhibit C, or Officer Roland Vanville, of Montgomery, Ala., became so absorbed in going down the street tucking tickets under windshield wipers that he inadvertently tagged his own car, realizing the extent of his zeal only when he went to drive home after his tour of duty.

In Detroit, a necessarily nameless Exhibit D tagged a car, forgot to fill in the blanks on the parking ticket, and was repaid in kind by the humorous car owner, who mailed the Detroit Police Department a two-dollar check, with blank signature line.

Laugh was on driver when 3-year-old told Constable Ed Schaeffer, San Antonio, Tex., "I saw her do it."



Tire-marking champ, Traffic Officer Christopher Aspall of Springfield, Mass., carries chalking stick to save stooping.

In Philadelphia, in what must have been the best skit since the Keystone Kops, Patrolman James J. Gallo slapped a ticket on the car of Constable William J. Bailey, let fall the carbon paper from his ticket book, and was promptly charged by Bailey with littering the street. Final score: $5 paid by Bailey, case against Gallo discontinued.

Even California cops joined the parade. Capt. George Robertson, head of the Los Angeles Parking Control Division, noticed so many cars parked illegally in the forbidden zones around the civic center that he ordered his men to ticket them all. Of the 199 cars tagged, 189 belonged to officials and police, including the Deputy Sheriff. (A similar roundup in Chicago bagged a federal judge.)

All Good Clean Fun

In San Francisco, a flood of phony parking tickets were traced to a printer who put the finger on a patrolman. The implication was that the latter, who regularly ticketed cars in the financial district, wanted the phonies to protect favorite car owners from other cops. Officially exonerated, the officer was sent to the suburbs where there were fewer friends, or at least fewer cars.

The spirit of fun extended up to the magistral bench. In New York, 19-year old Eugene Klein, of Forest Hills, arrested on a charge of doing 60 miles an hour, got into a spirited session with Magistrate Edward Thompson about whether Klein's car could or could not stop within 10 feet instead of the estimated 225. If it could, the Magistrate jovially offered to buy it for $100,000 as a wonder-car. (He finally slapped Klein with a $25 fine).

Even when they were right, the police were having trouble. In Philadelphia, irate F. B. Kern, owner of five businesses in Catawissa, Pa., got a ticket, immediately retaliated by depriving Philadelphia merchants of $250,000 worth of orders.

In San Antonio, Texas, the police had a chance to laugh back at the alibi-reciting public (left).

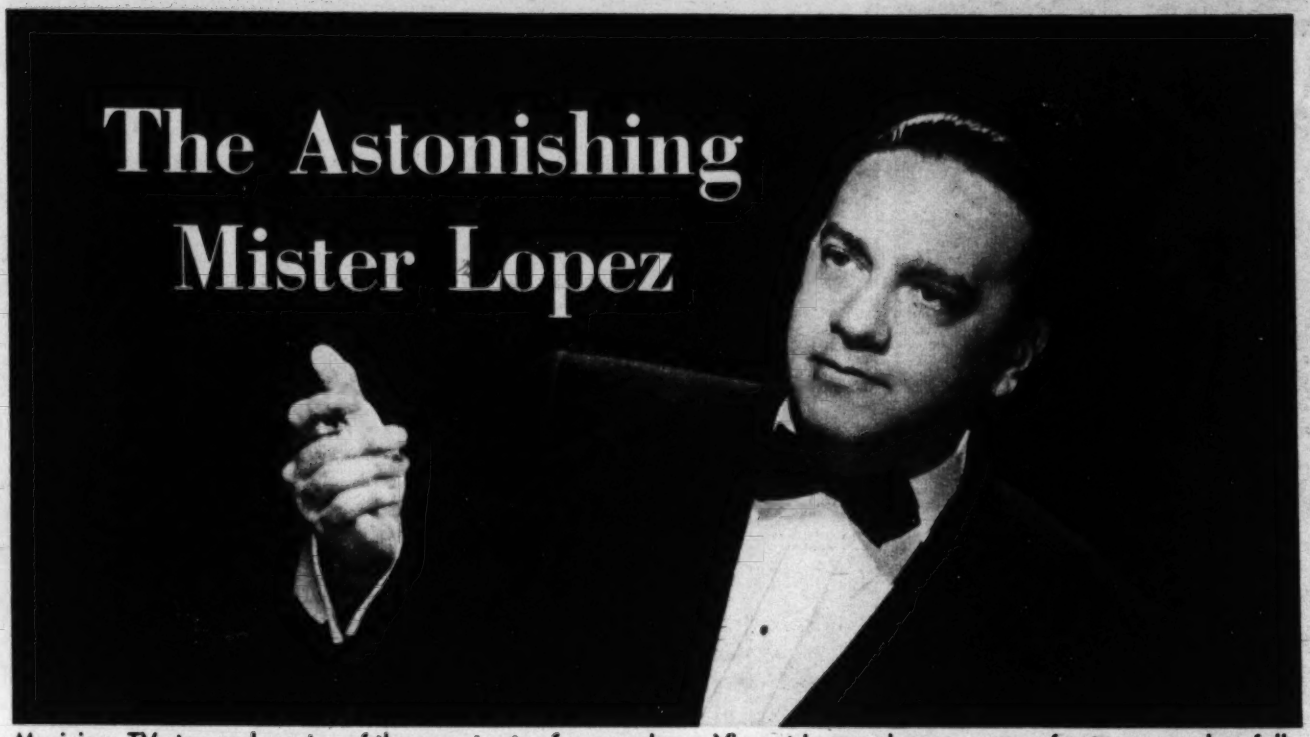
The Astonishing Mister Lopez



Musician, TV star and master of the secret arts of numerology, Vincent Lopez chooses names for top-rung showfolk.

He's a Big Name in popular music and TV, and a Big Namer to ambitious showpeople

HY GARDNER'S NEWSREEL FEATURETTE

KNOWN AS A SHY, reticent fellow, Vincent Lopez, after enjoying top success in popular music for 25 years, now finds himself at the peak of one career (music), on the crest of another (radio and TV) and a major consultant in still a third and totally foreign field.

As a piano-playing maestro, Lopez netted himself the tidy sum of $123,000 in 1948, and, thanks to a daily Dumont television show he'll net about $160,000 this year.

The least productive portion of his three-way existence, at least financially, is his devotion to numerology and astrology. One astrology magaine saw fit to pay him $1 a word to expound his findings. He takes it all very seriously.

Between his performances, Lopez studied the stars and became engrossed in the occult "science." In the down-and-out era of '29-30, he was offered $1,000,000 to serve five years as orchestra leader and musical director of the St. Regis Hotel in New York. But his partner said "no." Instead of admitting defeat, Lopez merely studied his astrology charts, relied heavily on delaying tactics, and when his charts indicated the proper time, approached his partner again. He won a release from his original contract. He credits astrology; others credit his business sense.

About this time an unknown musician unleashed a barrage of letters aimed at a job in the Lopez orchestra. Lopez paid no attention, until one letter was accompanied by a particularly unflattering caricature. Lopez sent for the artist, to demand an apology, and ended up hiring him as third violinist. The lad's name: Xavier Cugat.

Xavier Cugat: his lampoon won a job.

Aside from his predictions, which is a story we'll reserve for another time, Vincent Lopez's chief contribution to fellow showpeople is the way he's chosen names for several of them.

If it weren't for his star-gazing, you might never have heard of Betty Hutton, Deanna Durbin, Sunny Skylar and other big-time names – at least not under those names. For they were hand-tailored by Mr. Lopez.

Betty Hutton is an example. Lopez first met her when she was table-singing at the old Continental Cafe in Detroit under the name of Betty Darling.

"I changed her name from Darling to Hutton in 1938 when we opened at Billy Rose's Casa Manana on Broadway. I later met Betty's sister, changed her name to Marion Hutton, got a job for her, and she's gone places too," he says.

About 13 years ago Lopez ran into another attractive youngster with a beautiful voice, the Canadian-born Edna Mae Durbin. Vince emerged with a new first name: Deanna. Right now, she's headed for the Metropolitan Opera.

The most recent name-doctoring Lopez performed was for a chap who auditioned for his orchestra.

Sonny Schuyler was quite a vocalist and composer – but he didn't begin to shine until his boss changed the spelling, of his name to Sunny Skylar. He's now in the $1,000-per-week bracket.

Deanna Durbin: the name was Edna Mae.

"It's a joke," Vincent said without the trace of a chuckle in his voice. "People keep coming to me and saying 'Vince, I've got a few minutes to kill. Give me a new name. I want to make more of that folding stuff.' They don't realize that a great deal of painstaking research must be given before a name can be found. They can't understand that names have power–just like prayers, and for either to do any good, you must have faith."

Modern medical care is m

Too Old for CHILDREN

By LAWRENCE GALTON

A 40-YEAR-OLD WOMAN went to see her doctor not long ago and somewhat hesitantly popped the question: Could she have a baby? "My husband is afraid for me," she said, "and, to tell the truth, I am too. At my age I suppose it would be extremely dangerous."

"Not necessarily," said the doctor emphatically. "That's a widespread idea and a false one. The facts are going to surprise you."

They will surprise—agreeably—a great number of older couples who have been longing for but are afraid to have children. Included in this group are couples who married late in life and those who, barren since marriage, now see new hope in medical advances against sterility.

Today, a growing number of women 35, 40, and even 45, are having children safely, with few of the complications and extra pain and difficulty which, in the popular belief, are inevitable for older women. And this applies even to women of 40 or more having their very first child.

Here Are Some Old Ideas

Medical authorities have been poking holes in all the old wives' tales. Here are the tales—and the heartening facts:

1. Childbirth is very dangerous for older women. False. "Older women," says Dr. George W. Kosmak, distinguished obstetrician and editor of the American Journal of Obstetrics and Gynecology, "certainly can go through pregnancy and labor provided there are no disturbances of health."

To be sure, childbirth is safest for younger women. Statistics show that mortality is three times higher for mothers of 35 to 39 than for those of 20 to 24, eight times as great for 45 to 49.

Yet, even in the oldest age group, 1,000 women go through pregnancy successfully for every 10.3 who don't. Moreover, the statistics don't tell all, for they include deaths of women who undertake pregnancy without proper preparation, who get no medical care until too late.

Check-up Is Necessary

While every women ought to have a thorough medical check-up before undertaking to have a child, it's a rule that is especially true for older women. For the latter are likely to have high blood pressure and other illnesses.

Recently, Dr. L. A. Calkins of the University of Kansas Medical Center presented to the American Medical Association an analysis of 9,867 births, many of them of older mothers having children for the first time. While the report showed that abnormal delivery is moderately increased in these cases, it doesn't seriously affect the outcome.

For older women, there is more resort to Caesarean section. Reports from some hospitals show that in women over 35, four times as many such operations are performed as in younger women.

This is often due to the presence of heart diseases and to the fear that something might go wrong in re is making it much safer today for older women to bear children.

EN?

What are the chances for a woman to become a mother —after she enters the 30s?

labor. But mortality from such delivery is only one-half of one percent.

2. Childbirth is more painful for older women. It needn't be. "If it is at all," one obstetrician reports, "it's due to the fact that older women tend to be more tense."

3. Childbirth is psychologically bad for older women. Perhaps the hoariest old wives' tale in existence is that there is a psychosis of pregnancy, a separate and distinct state of mental disturbance which may come from having a child. It just isn't so!

4. The child of an older woman is likely to be born dead. Statistics do show that older mothers produce more stillborn babies than do younger mothers. But even in this group, 10 infants are born alive for every stillborn birth.

And, again, these statistics include many cases in which there was little or no medical care.

5. It's bad for the child. Is it true that the child born of older parents suffers from lack of companionship and understanding? While many authorities still subscribe to this belief, an increasing number of them—doctors, psychiatrists, family agency workers—score points for older parents.

For one thing, there is increasing emphasis now on the need for reasonable discipline rather than no discipline at all in child-raising. The older woman, many of the experts say, may often have the edge here over her younger sister. It takes maturity to recognize reasonable discipline.

Older Parents Live Under Less Tension

Finally, every child expert agrees that children need a home environment as free of tension as possible. Very often, older people who want children have achieved, between themselves, a well-adjusted relationship and can offer just such an environment.

Five old wives' tales—and all five have huge holes in them.

The happy fact is simply this: If you want a child, no matter how old you are, your doctor can tell you whether you're capable of having one. And if you undertake it, chances are that under his care, making use of all the many advances of modern medicine, your pregnancy will be much more pleasant, your delivery much more safe and painless, your child much more healthy than you ever would have thought possible.

For a Sweetheart of a Figure

An Ohio farm girl in Hollywood: this is how Jean Peters looks in her fourth movie, "Love That Brute." That beaded gown weighs 28 pounds.

How Can You Make Xmas Toys?

That's what parents, uncles, aunts, brothers and sisters everywhere want to know as Christmas draws near. Watch for a report in your copy of PARADE next Sunday.

Paul Douglas is her latest leading man. Her others have been: Ty Power, Dana Andrews, Ray Milland.

Jean Peters

What happens when a farm girl goes to Hollywood? She buys a farm

TWO YEARS AGO movie fans were pleasantly surprised by a new face on the screen—a pretty, green-eyed brunette who had what the fan writers like to call "sultry charm." She played with Tyrone Power in "Captain from Castile."

Today, four movies and a thousand press releases later, she is starring with Paul Douglas in "Love That Brute," a gangster satire.

When a new star storms Hollywood, the U. S. public has learned to expect from press agents a deluge of biographical corn. She does (or does not) sew her own clothes; does (or does not) like to bake cakes; is admired by her friends and "studio officials" for her (1) ready wit, (2) friendly charm or (3) her love of books.

All this has been said about pretty Jean Peters, who does sew and does bake. But in her case the biographical releases have a new twist. A farm girl from Canton, O., who got to Hollywood via a beauty contest, she does not like night clubs, doesn't drink, is a great baseball fan, and does not argue with her studio (20th Century-Fox).

In Hollywood, that's something!

Today her earnings are supposed to run to four figures weekly, and she has a seven-year contract. But she's already looking backward to Ohio: she's just bought a 24-acre Ohio farm.

Jean Peters lives alone with her dog in a modest rented house in an unpretentious neighborhood.

Football Yarns that Coaches Like to Spin . . .

By FRANK De BLOIS

WHAT'S THE COUNTRY'S BEST football yarn?

For all the tall tales being told in fieldhouses from coast to coast this month, there's no real way to tell, because every fan and every player has his own favorite.

But to get the pick of a 30-year crop of football stories from men who ought to know the best ones, PARADE went to the nation's top coaches. Some of them told comic stories, some dramatic ones, some sentimental ones. Altogether, they added authentic color to the history of the nation's top fall sport. Here they are:

Steve Owen, coach of the New York Football Giants, tells this one about the great Ken Strong, top man in the National Pro League when he played for the Staten Island, N. Y., Stapletons. Says Owen:

"For years, Strong could do no wrong on Staten Island. And it was his popularity there that gave me one of the most pleasurable moments I've ever spent on a football field."

The incident, Owen recalls, took place in a game between the Giants and the Stapletons, played in a tiny Staten Island Park where the grandstands almost overflowed onto the gridiron's 40-yard stripe.

At a tense moment in the game Strong was attempting to step out of bounds with the ball when he was nailed by Ray Flaherty, then a Giant end, who unaccountably began to throttle the pride of the Stapletons.

"Leggo!" gargled Strong.

"Then stop slugging me with your free hand!" retorted Flaherty.

Purple and pop-eyed, Strong looked up—only to discover that a kindly-looking but determined old lady in the stands was belaboring his opponent over the head with her umbrella!

No Blocking for Beattie

Herman Hickman's recollection of football's brightest moment is centered around Beattie Feathers, a team-mate of Hickman's at the University of Tennessee.

The score, says Hickman, now coach at Yale, was tied and with seconds left to play Tennessee had the ball on Alabama's nine-yard line.

"We decided to use our famous Number 10 play," Hickman recounts, "in which the wingback and right end were supposed to obliterate the defensive left tackle. At the same time our fullback and blocking back were ordered to massacre their left end.

"Actually the defensive left tackle leapfrogged over the wingback and right end. The blocking back and the fullback tripped, stumbled, and fell on their faces. The right guard pulled to his left and the left guard pulled to his right. They bumped their heads together and knocked each other cold. Feathers, however, ran through the whole Alabama team for a winning touchdown.

" 'Nice blocking, boys,' he said to us later. 'Give me interference like that and I'll go all the way every time!' "

A Voice from the Past

Frank Leahy, who first won fame at Boston College and now is mentor at Notre Dame, has a story he likes to tell at the expense of assistant Joe McArdle, whose duty it is to oversee the play of the hard-charging Irish guards.

In 1948, Notre Dame squeezed out Purdue, 28-27, due largely to a field goal by guard Steve Oracko.

As the ball sailed through the uprights, McArdle, who was perched inside the scoreboard reporting on the defensive formations of the visiting team, let out a whoop of joy.

"Bless you, Oracko," he roared through one of the slots in the board.

That evening, an old grad walked up to Leahy. "Frank," he whispered into the coach's ear, "I heard 'Rock' talking during the game."

"Are you sure?" asked Leahy, who realizes that many alumni believe that the immortal Knute Rockne still watches over the Irish.

"Sure!" replied the emphatic grad. "I heard it distinctly, like a voice from heaven. 'Bless you,' it said. It seemed to come from the scoreboard. And, you know Coach—you'll never believe it—Rock even knew Oracko's name!"

Maniaci's Relative

Jim Crowley, once coach at Fordham, tells of the days when Joe Maniaci was one of his best fullbacks, but a player with an unhappy tendency to fumble at crucial moments.

After one particularly harrowing day, Crowley recalls creeping into a New York restaurant. In the hope that it would quiet his jangled nerves, he ordered a bowl of soup. But the waiter made matters worse by dumping the soup into Crowley's lap.

"Excuse me," he said, brushing Crowley off. "But I just recognized you, Mr. Crowley. You know I have a cousin who plays on your team."

"Stop it, man!" roared Crowley. "I could tell by the way you handled that soup that you could only be related to Joe Maniaci!"

Crowley, who, as a member of Notre Dame's immortal "Four Horsemen" once scored a touchdown after losing his pants to an enemy tackler, still savors the pleasure of his frequent tiffs with his coach, Knute Rockne.

Once, when Crowley missed a play in practice, the great Norwegian blew up.

"What," he asked icily, eyeing Crowley as the latter returned to the bench, "is dumber than a dumb Irishman?"

"A smart Swede," Crowley said sweetly.

This trouser-skirt combination raised a mild furor at the Paris showings, may win American popularity. Unlike most Paris innovations, it has not yet been generally copied.

THE PARIS TOUCH

It's already changing our winter wardrobes

By JEAN DUBINSKY

RIGHT NOW, the Paris showings are opening on Main Street.

In every U. S. city and town, dress racks are crammed with new winter fashions that reflect the big Paris style unveilings of a few weeks ago. The coats, the costume jewelry, the suits, the handbags—almost all of them are made in the U. S., but most of them are marked by touches, patterns or designs that first appeared in Paris late last summer.

For the fact is that Messrs. Dior, Fath, Balmain, Worth and the rest of the Paris custom dressmaking fraternity still decide world fashion. And that means that via the U. S. clothing industry, they influence what every American woman will wear, whether she pays $14.95 or $149.50. For a summary of what their major influences are going to be, look at the next page.

THE AUTHOR, the editor of a fashion trade magazine, attended the Paris showings. She is a close observer of trends in U.S. fashion centers.—Editor.

Paris borrows from America, then gives us the style. Roomy jacket here is direct descendant of U. S. lumberjack's loose coat.

Paris did things to its pockets and necklines; legs are coming back

Just what are the French touches we'll be seeing in our stores and wardrobes for months to come?

I had the good luck to see the showings in Paris last August, and since then I've watched American manufacturers produce Paris-influenced lines. Here's what we can expect:

To start with, Paris designers have given us clothes that reveal LEGS once more. That will please both wearer and observer, as well as confirmed opponents of the New Look.

All the current hoop-la about "free forms" means just what you hope it does. To put it very simply, figures will be figures. The female waistline and hips will be easily located just where nature put them.

That Shoulder Problem

And this should please the ladies: The "sloping shoulder," which looked to many of us like the "droopy shoulder," has now become the "natural shoulder." It's not the padded football shoulder either, but a very normal looking and even flattering business, built up with the aid of epaulets and other little designer gimmicks.

It all comes right down to this: To replace the tired old New Look, Paris has given us the American Look.

The good old shirtwaist dress, for example, as synonymous with America as the Rocky Mountains, blossoms forth in glorified variety, courtesy of Paris, France. The bloused silhouette you're beginning to see can easily trace its ancestry right back to our own lumberjacket. Paris shows it in fanciful forms, shaping a whole range of easy-to-wear dresses, coats and suits. The short evening dress, another Paris rage, comes as no surprise to many an American girl who hasn't owned a long one for years.

As always, there's a giddy aspect to fashion. If you're looking for the plunging neckline, it's moved. Last year's show-stopper has done an about face, clear around to the back. Less extreme, and the likeliest candidate to replace it in popularity, is a business called the "shutter neckline," a kind of "now you see it, now you don't" affair, closed up to here one moment, and open down to there the next, via a couple of crossover curtains. This one is perfect for commuters and career girls.

Pockets, normally considered very handy to have around, have acquired the wanderlust and travel high up on shoulders, or way down near the knees. Some have even strayed around back.

As for the little knick-knacks of fashion, like jewelry, we note the wide jewelled ankle-strap – and chandeliers!

Chandeliers will be on ears this season, in the form of large, dangly rhinestone earrings. These will come out in the evening only, fortunately, and often on only one ear.

For a hint of things to come, there is really astounding news. Let's face it. PARIS SHOWS PANTS! They're lurking under dresses slit at the sides, but there they are, and no mistaking them. They haven't turned up on Main Street just yet—but remember what they once said about your slacks?

Plunging neckline now dips down back of dress. (By Dior).

Buffalo Ranch

Gene Clark hopes to hit jackpot by growing shaggy beasts that our ancestors slaughtered

By PETER WYDEN

MANY A MOTORIST driving through the snake-infested Kansas hills some 17 miles west of Independence is startled by a succession of ominous signs nailed to stout, if gnarled, fence posts.

"Danger," they proclaim to passers-by, "Keep Out." And then, as if in afterthought, they add, "No Hunting."

The danger is more real than apparent, for behind the rusty wires that sag from post to post grazes one of America's few commercial herds of buffalo, shaggy, evil-tempered beasts that can upturn an auto with an almost effortless nudge.

The buffalos are the pride and property of voluble, 37-year-old Gene Clark, Kansas-born plumber who made one fortune building swimming pools for Hollywood stars and is now out to make another propagating the near-extinct prey of the pioneers.

Within the next two years, Clark expects to be slaughtering a bison a day, turning each giant into a remunerative production line of steaks, rugs, blankets, stuffed heads and buffaloburgers.

The last item he plans to hawk from a neon-studded stand in Hollywood, the town where the idea was born.

Right now, Clark is grazing 106 of the quick-to-anger animals on his 840-acre range. He expects about 70 calves to be born by spring, 130 in 1951. His goal: 600 head and 4,000 acres of roaming grounds. With the nation's total buffalo population estimated at 3,700, Clark thinks he may already be the owner of the largest commercial herd.

For the buffalo rancher, demand is far less of a problem than supply. The government will sell anyone half a carcass, but the waiting list is long and the meat, as often as not, is from tough old bulls, hard on both teeth and taste.

As Indians and white hunters knew when they massacred buffalo in the 'sixties, a single animal is quite a prize.

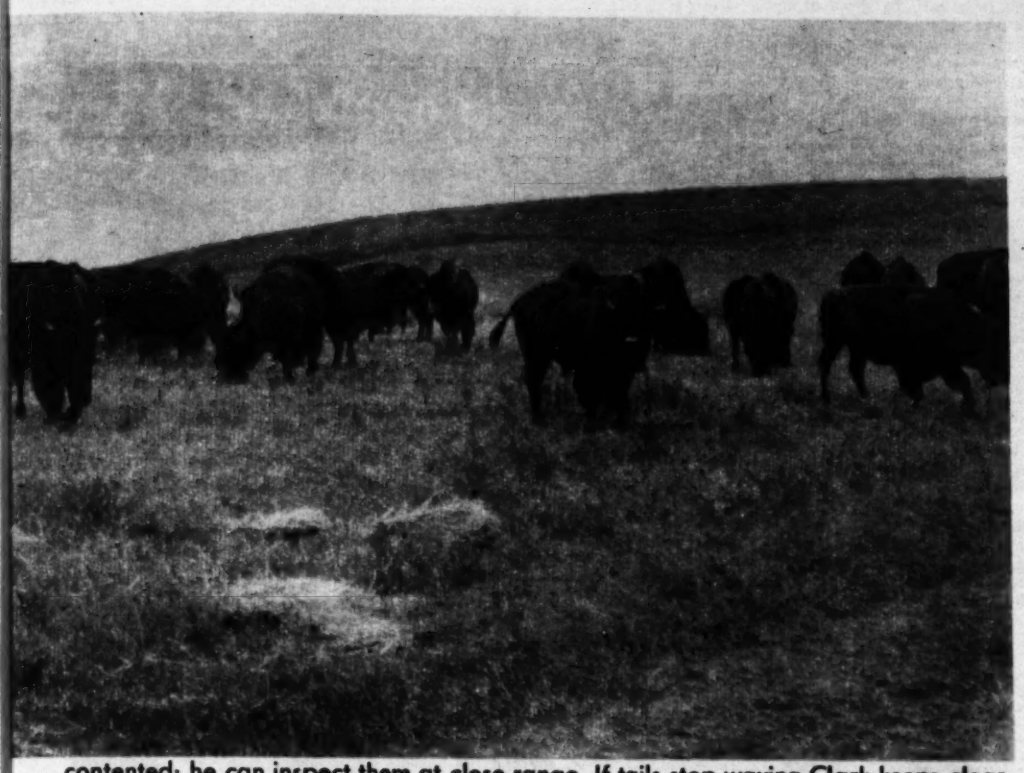
Meat Brings $1.75 a Pound

More than half of its two or three thousand pounds is meat. The heavy black tongue alone is an almost unknown epicurean delight. Much of the rest sells at about $1.75 a pound – when available. Rugs from the skins sell for $125 or more.

But if nature supplies the merchandise, a buffalo ranch demands more of its owner than ringing a cash register.

Clark's potential steaks can ram their horns through any barn. Corral fences are eight-feet high, thick as telephone poles, and made of solid oak. Clark once had to pump eight bullets into an angry bull's head to kill him!

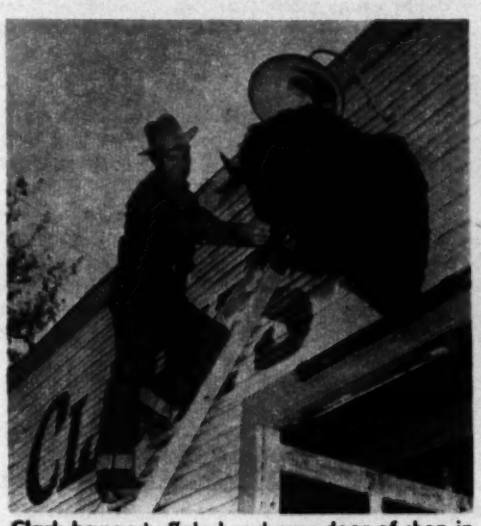
Despite dangers and cost, the man who once peddled $84,000 swimming pools to movie moguls is full of confidence. "When this ranch pays off," he says, tossing an approving nod at his stock, "it won't be in driblets. We'll hit the jackpot–but good!"



contented; he can inspect them at close range. If tails stop waving Clark keeps clear.

Buffalo jackets worn by Clark and wife, Faye, have inspired frenzied bidding by strangers.

"Ferdinand," two-month-old buffalo calf is a family pet, lives in backyard, loves bread, water.



Clark hangs buffalo head over door of shop in Independence where he runs ranch business.

Buffalo rug is warm, non-inflammable, popular with Clark children, Jacqueline, 14, and Jerry, 6.

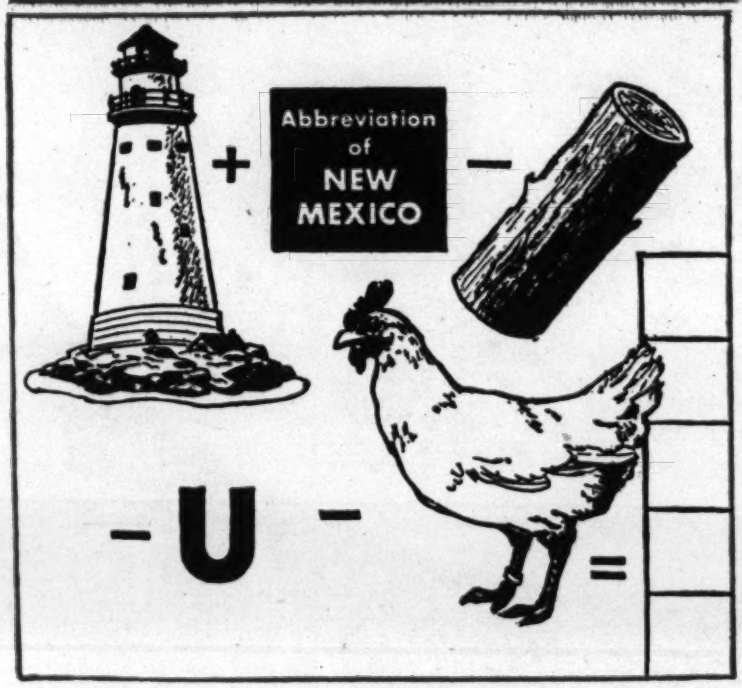
$75,000.00 CASH Must Be Won!

Can YOU Solve This Clever Little Puzzle?

It's a sample of the kind of puzzles you'll enjoy solving in this new $75,000.00 Contest. See "how to solve it" explanation below.



The Correct (Last) Name for This Puzzle Appears Below:

John Paul JONES, Alfred E. SMITH, Jesse JAMES, Patrick HENRY, John ADAMS, Ulysses S. GRANT

This puzzle represents a well-known name. The correct name is one of those listed under the puzzle. Let's work it out together and see how the puzzles are solved:

First let's identify the objects pictured: LIGHTHOUSE . . . LOG . . . HEN. Let us jot down LIGHTHOUSE, to which we add N M (abbreviation of New Mexico) as directed by the plus sign. We thus now have L I G H T H O U S E N M. We are next told (by the minus sign) to subtract LOG, so we cross out the letters L O G, leaving I H T H U S E N M. Then we take away the letter U and H E N: Thus, crossing out U and H E N, we are finally left with I T H S M. So we fit those letters into the squares to the right of the equal sign, and they fit exactly (five letters, five squares).

But now we must unscramble and rearrange those letters to form a well-known name. What name can it be? Can it be THIMS? No! Can it be MITHS? No! Can it be SMITH? Why, sure enough there's Alfred E. SMITH in the list under the puzzle.

Serious trouble flares when children on playground greet Ellen Green with taunts of "Ellen is a Jew!"

RACE LESSON

In "Prejudice," churches tackle problem of bias

"INTOLERANCE is a disease . . .!"

In these words, the pastor of a church in a small American town sums up the theme of "Prejudice," a new film produced under exclusively religious auspices. "Prejudice" tells the story of a young factory executive who discovers that he is guilty of the very race-hatred he decries in others.

The film is the latest in a constantly growing crop of movies being used in U. S. churches for religious education. No fewer than 350 such movies have been produced to date. They are being shown in some 40,000 churches in all states.

Produced by the Protestant Film Commission, "Prejudice" is being distributed not only to churches but to commercial movie theatres—and to schools, factories, civic organizations and clubs.

On first visit to church, Hansons hear pastor say that prejudice is born of fear.

Ellen, child of Jewish neighbor, shows Hansons a "hate leaflet" found on lawn.

When Al (center), a Jew, shows boss new production plan, Joe becomes resentful.

Film shows how racial hate backfires in an American town

• Joe Hanson, a plant manager, fears that Al Green, his assistant, may supersede him. Hinting that Al is disliked because he is Jewish, Joe persuades the boss to transfer him. When Joe's son, Joey, is scorned by playmates as a "dumb Swede," Joe realizes that race hate can backfire. Conscience-stricken, he resolves to restore Al to job.

Transferred, Al tells his family bad news. "Same old story—I'm Jewish," he explains.

Joe confesses he used race issue to remove Al, then persuades boss to rehire him

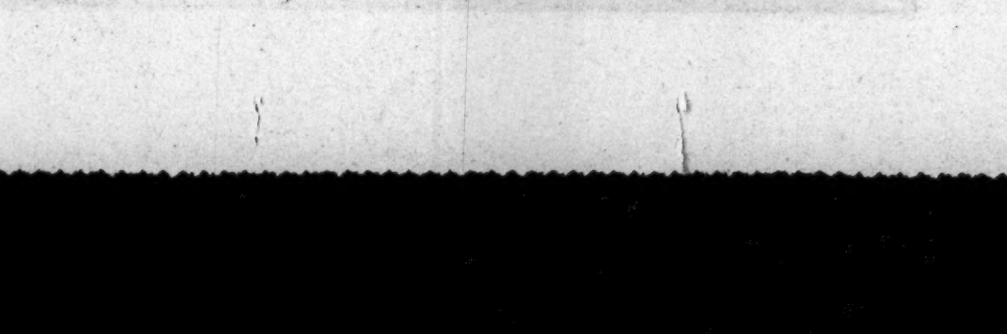
PIXIE PUZZLE ADVENTURES

by Matt Curzon

Copyright, 1949, New York Herald Tribune Inc.

1 THE GREAT MATADOR INVITES THE PIXIES TO ACCOMPANY HIM TO THE ARENA. THEY ALL MARCH THROUGH THE CHEERING CROWDS. WIZZIE NOTICES THE POSITIONS THEY HOLD AS THEY MARCH. HE DRAWS A DIAGRAM OF THEIR POSITION AND SAYS HE CAN PLACE NUMBERS FROM 1 TO 9 ON EACH POSITION SO THAT EACH STRAIGHT LINE OF THREE NUMBERS WILL ADD UP TO 15. CAN YOU?

2 THE MATADOR SHOWS THE PIXIES THE BULL HE IS GOING TO FIGHT. THE BULL IS BEHIND A SCREEN. IF YOU WANT TO SEE HIM START WITH THE DOT IN BOX 1 AND DRAW A LINE TO THE DOT IN BOX 2, THEN 3, 4, 5, ETC.



3 WHEN THE PIXIES GET TO THEIR SEATS THEY SEE IN THE MIDST OF THEIR NINE SEATS THE WORD ROW. WIZZIE HOLDS UP THREE LETTERS AND SAYS HE CAN PLACE THESE THREE LETTERS IN FRONT OF ROW, AND THE SAME THREE LETTERS AFTER ROW FORMING A NINE LETTER WORD. WHAT IS THE WORD?

4 AS THE GREAT MATADOR WAVES TO HIS CHEERING FANS, CHAMPIE SEES THE BULL DASHING IN BEHIND HIM. "LOOK OUT FOR THE BULL!" SHOUTS CHAMPIE. BUT NOBODY LISTENS TO HIM BECAUSE THE BULL CANNOT BE SEEN UNLESS YOU LOOK FOR HIM. CAN YOU FIND THE BULL? HE'S HIDDEN ON THE FENCE.
